RECORD BREAKING PRIZE TO BE AWARDED WHEN CHAMPIONS RUN TODAY

Immense Crowd Expected At Race Course; King's Cross Favorite Over Silver Streak, Former Winner Of Classic

"The Champions!"

Who in Shanghai or its environs does not thrill at the two words, signifying the greatest racing classic in the Far East, which has thrilled lovers of equine prowess since the days before the Flood?

"The Champions!"

And today's the day!

At three o'clock this afternoon, or thereabouts, some twenty-odd gallant China ponies will pirouette before the starter at the Race Course, in the presence of what promises to be a record-breaking attendance, and as the red and white flags go down, scamper a mile and quarter to see who wins a fortune, for, be it known, that this season's big prize runs far and away beyond all former records—a matter of two lakhs, in fact.

A CHANCE FORFEITED

When the bay pony Tivoli upset expectations in the final race of yesterday's card and won that event, ending the day, a total of 20 ponies had qualified for today's big race. Messrs. Toeg and Laicaca forfeited the chance for their dun pony Nyanza, winner Monday with Dunluce, when they elected a run-off for the Royal Navy Cup after the ponies had run a dead heat in the fifth race Monday. At that, Nyanza still has more than a fair chance to qualify in one or the other of two races in which the pony is entered today.

FAVOR KING'S CROSS

Popular opinion last night swayed in favor of Messrs. C. and H. White's King's Cross as winner of The Champions today. For second choice opinion seemed divided between Messrs. Winsome and Hasty's gallant griffin The Eagle and Mr. John Peel's veteran winner Silver Streak. Mr. Peek's pony High Tide and Mr. N. S. Sparke's Colinton were also favored by those speculating in the outcome of the big race.

OTHERS RECKONED

Among the ponies still to be reckoned with as possible starters in The Champions, entered in races today are Messrs. Winsome and Hasty's favorite The Curlew, and their Oriole, Mr. Jeromi's roan Tatouillard, Messrs. Toeg and Gubbay's Triumph, Wilson and Churchill, Mr. Cire's Waterlight, Messrs. Potts and Hayim's Allied King, Sir Ellis Kadoorie's Hongkong Chief and Mr. Ezra's Rosewood, winner of The Champions of a year ago last spring.

AMERICANS ARE URGED TO ASSIST FRENCH INDUSTRY

President Of Standard Oil Is Confident Of Restoration Of Wrecked Businesses

(Rerter's Service)

Paris, November 8.—On the eve of his departure from France to return to America, Mr. A. C. Bedford, President of the Standard Oil Company, made the following statement:

"France has still many post-war problems to solve but all those who, like me, have conversed with her statesmen and have come into contact with her people have the greatest confidence in the result.

"In the devastated regions the French peasant has applied himself to the task of restoration with an almost fanatical energy. Men and women, young and old, toil from dawn to dusk and what they have accomplished with the aid of the Government is almost incredible. In other districts the peasant finds himself in a better position than before the war and has accorded a hearty reception to the new loan, which promises to prove a great success.

"The French consider that their attitude towards Germany is misunderstood abroad and I think they are right. It is a great lesson for anyone who studies international relations to see their devastated land and their efforts to restore it to productivity.

"We hope to be the pioneers in a movement of new capital coming from America to support France's tense, penetrating dampness. The industries."

Merchants In States Advised To Study South America

(Rerter's Service)

Buenos Aires, Sept. 28 (by mail).—American trade has not afforded to South America the facilities the latter was accustomed to receive from Europe in the way of long credits and strict compliance with contracts, says the Epoca, a Government organ, commenting on the efforts being made by the United States Government and business men to retain the South American markets obtained during the war. This is the reason, the newspaper continues, why the majority of merchants here are turning again to European markets.

Institution of a body of commercial attaches who will get first-hand knowledge of trade conditions in these countries, and will afterwards serve in the State Department in Washington, is expected to help in retaining the hold American commerce has obtained here, the paper adds.

Paris, November 8.—"During the present session of Parliament," writes the Petit Parisan, "the business, which M. Paris, November 8.—The French press points out that on the night of November 6 the workmen in the power houses of Berlin suddenly went on strike.

EXCHANGE DEALS TO ASSIST FIRM, BOULON CLAIM

Defendant In Embezzlement Case Declares Speculation Was Emergency Move

NEW WITNESSES TODAY

Prosecution To Proceed With Fresh Testimony At Hearing This Afternoon

The examination of Mr. Horace Beeson, assistant treasurer of Messrs. Gaston, Williams and Wigmore, was concluded at yesterday's session of the preliminary hearing in the Tls. 25,000 embezzlement case brought against Mr. Ferdinand G. Boulon by the firm. New witnesses for the prosecution will testify today at 2 p.m., when the hearing is to be resumed.

All of yesterday afternoon's session was taken up by Mr. R. S. Haskell's cross-examination of the witness as to the details of the exchange transactions which form the basis of the case. Mr. W. S. Fleming, appeared for the prosecution, acting for the firm and as Special Assistant District Attorney.

FIRM'S FINANCES

These transactions, Mr. Haskell told United States Commissioner Schuhl toward the end of the hearing, started out as plain speculations and were entered into by the defendant simply because of the fact that the firm was pressed for money. They were entered into with Chinese dealers on the understanding that the proceeds of the deals were to be lent back to Mr. Boulon and by him to the firm, which was very much in need of money at the time. Counsel stated that the defendant would produce a letter from the New York offices urging him to use all his "pluck and ingenuity" in view of the situation.

Questioned by the Commissioner following this statement, Mr. Beeson, declared that the firm never bought exchange for speculation, but only for specific purposes.

Taking up the various counts in the charges against his client, Mr. Haskell questioned the witness in detail. There were four transactions in count 1 involving Tls. 12,250.54, he said, the proceeds of three of them being credited to Chinese dealers. At first the check was charged in full to one of the dealers, later it was adjusted to the several accounts which had borne the credits. The fourth transaction for Tls. 1,760.91 had been credited to Mr. Boulon.

EXCHANGE PURCHASES

Considerable time was taken up in the examination of the firm's exchange purchase and sales records, the purchase contracts book showing the entry in October, in one instance, of a contract made in June. This was the only contract involved in the charges which was pointed out by the witness as being made out of chronological order. But Mr. Haskell pointed out a number of other contracts on the same page which were originally made at earlier dates. The reason for their entry out of order, Mr. Beeson stated, was that they were for unsold contracts which had not been found out about until after an investigation had been begun.

Counsel for the defendant pointed out that exchange transactions amounting to over Tls. 31,000 had been passed by the witness and Mr. Jones. He inquired if Mr. Beeson had previously stated that he knew nothing of these transactions until the arrival of Mr. Swift, vice-president of the company. The witness replied that he had begun investigating a month before Mr. Swift's arrival.

"These transactions cover a period from March 2 to June 25," continued Mr. Haskell, "and in all this time there was nothing to cause you to investigate?"

"If I had been acting strictly as an auditor, I certainly should have discovered something, but I was busy with other things."

It is expected that Mr. Swift will take the stand as first witness today and the prosecution will probably call two other witnesses.

France Plans For Armistice Fete

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, November 8.—The French Parliament will assemble in special session today. The first bill with which the two Chambers will have to deal provides for the burial of an unknown soldier's remains beneath the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile on November 11.

Abrupt Costumes Of Chinese Ladies Officially Banned

The ladies have gone and got in bad with the authorities again.

And all over that same old issue which has been agitating folks ever since Ma Eve stepped out and raised it in those early horticultural days by evolving the first decollette. The present day scramble on the part of feminine young China to get back to the sylvan simplicity of Mrs. Adam's time is what is giving the censors colic in the immediate instance.

Yessir, in the eyes of a number of startled officials those young ladies of China who claim to constitute the vanguard in the pursuit of the modern idea are galloping headlong to perdition, and threatening to drag the entire sisterhood of the nation after them.

There is altogether too much arm and ankle in evidence on the streets today they have discovered. In this crisis Mr. Wang Kung-ting, Taoyin of Shanghai, and Mr. Hsu Kuo-liang, Chief of the Nantao Police, have risen to grapple with the emergency. Henceforth—it is blazoned forth in an official proclamation, just issued—any Chinese lady appearing in public in the precincts of their jurisdiction whose costume does not measure up to certain standards of decorum, will be penalized not to exceed $5, or given not to exceed five days for reflection in an iron trimmed boudoir.

"We are in perfect agreement," clarion the collaborators of the proclamation, "that the cutting and trimming of clothes should be in accord with the dignity and self-respect of the nation, and that people should not adopt queer or flashy fashions. . . . Any person attiring herself in such peculiar or alien apparel as may violate the good customs of the land shall be liable to punishment"—in the amounts aforesaid.

And it is not only wicked Shanghai and its environs which cause the authors to sigh about the times. They note with alarm that other cities and provinces are hellbent, "competing in their inclination" toward a state of utter abandon.

"Wearing apparel of women is mostly too short," they lament, "showing arms and ankles. Some is in imitation of foreign styles, making the wearer neither a foreigner nor a Chinese. The wearers are devoid of the sense of shame and frequent the public thoroughfares without show of embarrassment."

Horrifyingly to the contrary:

"They consider themselves fashionable; and should this practice be allowed to continue, and women be allowed to copy this horrible habit, the sense of shame will eventually be unknown to the sex."

And, finally to put the kibosh on the present state of affairs—

"To prevent the further appearance of such wearing material in the public streets, we hereby reaffirm these restrictions, and inform the women of the province that unless they blot out this terrible habit of wearing these peculiar dresses and showing their arms and ankles they shall be punished with the full rigidity of the law."

Which would seem to settle it.

If Messrs. Wang and Hsu will take a friendly tip from one who has briefly tarried there, they will not visit the lawn at the Race Club today.

French Funds For Upper Silesia Are Used By Germans

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, November 8.—It is stated in French diplomatic circles that information has been received tending to show that the funds, subscribed principally by France, for the purpose of aiding and supplying food to the Upper Silesians in accordance with the Spa Agreement, have in reality been used to feed the German propaganda in connection with the plebiscite.

BOLSHEVIK PLOT AGAINST STATES IS DISCLOSED

Soviet Government Is Seeking To Send Agitators Into United Staes

COUNTER-MOVES ARE MADE

General Use Of Fraudulent Passports Ascribed To Emissaries

(U. S. Naval Radio)

New York, Nov. 8.—The Rotterdam correspondent for the Associated Press telegraphs: "The Russian Bolsheviki government is trying, in every way possible, to send agitators to the United States, according to evidence collected by United States diplomatic agents from a spy that was captured at Moscow.

They are using what is known as the "Coudier" system, which is said to surpass the German general staff pre war system.

The United States agents in European ports have decided to start a campaign against these undesirables. As references the American embassies have furnished them with the names of 2,500 bolsheviki "missionaires."

Scores are believed to have been shipped towards America with the trade of seamen stated in fraudulent passports.

A certain Russian consular attache was recently offered $250 as a daily allowance for agitators coming to the United States."

CENTRAL POWER AT CHITA FIRM IN SEAT, CLAIM

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Vladivostok, November 8.—M. Krasnoshchekoff, telegraphing to the representatives of the Vladivostok Government, says:

"All the temporary Governments have been dissolved and are resigning to the new central power (at Chita). They are surprised at your attitude, which is delaying the joining up of the Russian Far East—particularly the army which has been formed and is prepared to occupy the country.

"The arrival of your delegates cannot change the position. The regular army has entered Chita and has sent an ultimatum to Ataman Semenoff and General Kappel, demanding that they lay down arms by November 10, or otherwise the army will commence war."

The Vladivostok Government hopes that its delegates will be able to persuade M. Krasnoshchekoff to give up his "high-handed Bolshevik program," which, the government considers, is liable to cause internal warfare and possibly Japanese intervention.

Ataman Semenoff's and General Kappell's troops retreated in good order from Chita. They suffered only small losses and are preparing for an offensive. The report that Verzbitski, the commander of General Kappell's troops, had been killed in fighting with the Partisans, is now denied.

CHINA UNITED NOW, ASSERTS NEW PREMIER

Commission To Study Best Methods Of Reorganisation

FOUR SECTIONS

All Factions Involved In Controversy To Be Represented

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, Nov. 6.—In an interview with upwards of 30 Chinese and foreign newspaper representatives, the Premier, Chin Yun-ping, yesterday evening discussed recent efforts towards the restoration of peace within the country, and his plans for its unification and future government.

National unity and a genuinely representative Parliament were the two basic needs which the Premier emphasised, and towards their attainment he pledged his utmost effort.

REORGANISE ARMY

He also dealt with the questions of drafting a constitution, defining the powers of the Legislature, army reorganisation, and the separation of the respective powers of civil and military officials.

The recent proclamation of national union by Mandate, was, he said, of course, merely a matter of deed as well as of form. The Government, however, intended to put the Mandate into actual operation, and the desire of the people for peace was, he felt, so overwhelming that the country might already be considered as really united.

In taking over the affairs of the Military Government of the South, the appointment of a commission to study methods of reorganisation would be necessary. The Central Government would be represented on this body, and those who have worked in the military Government would be members of it.

In order to deal with matters in detail, this commission would be divided into four departments, dealing respectively with general, political, military and financial matters.

NEW PARLIAMENT

In order that the new Parliament should represent the will of the people, the Premier stated, there must be a free election. The Government had, therefore, decided, to supervise the next election in such a way as to allow of no corruption.

The Government hoped that the new Parliament would draft a constitution as soon as possible, as it was felt that, with a fixed constitution, party strife would soon be eliminated. A reduction of the present army was also necessary, as the country was unable to support the number of troops now under arms.

The question of abolishing the post of Tuchun would rest with the new Legislature after its election, but it was the policy of the Government, as, no doubt, it was the wish of the people, that the respective powers of civil and military officials should be clearly separated.

DISCUSSES FINANCES

Proceeding to discuss the question of financial reorganisation, the Premier said there had been much talk of bankruptcy in connection with Chinese finance, and there had been many reasons for such talk. The budget had always been a mere formality.

Expenditure had not always been carried out in the most honest manner, and very often it had gone far beyond the budget, while receipts had not always been free from corruption.

No program of reform could be achieved unless the foundations of national finance were put on an honest basis, and this the Government would do its best to carry out, together with the establishment of a uniform currency.

As a safeguard against corruption, the Government would insist that all public receipts and ex-

International Conference Is Held At Peking To Discuss Famine Relief

Upon the invitation of the United International Famine Relief Committee, a Conference of societies engaged in famine relief was held in offices of the Chinese Maritime Customs, Peking, from November 2-4.

Representatives of Hankow, Honan, Shantung, Shansi and Shensi societies were present. The chair was taken at alternate sessions, by Mr. Liang Shih-i and Dr. E. Douglas Gray.

After reports from delegates as to conditions existent and work being done in various regions, the following program of discussion was undertaken:

1. How best to combine forces, with allocation of areas.
2. Best system of distribution of food and clothing.
3. Specific relief measures.
4. Government initiation.
5. Best system of controlling funds.
6. Arrangement for future exchange of information.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED

In regard to some of these no detailed conclusions were recorded, but practically unanimous resolutions were arrived at upon the following points of general policy:

1. That since relief work cannot be efficiently and equitably effected in all the regions affected by famine unless these districts be clearly allocated between the different relief organisations;

And since such allocation is absolutely necessary to prevent overlapping and omissions;

And since the United International Famine Relief Committee has the best position for taking the initiative in such allocation, and for carrying out its speedy accomplishment;

And since, on the other hand, the regions mentioned below are already claimed as follows:

Honan by the Hankow and Honan Committees.

Chihli, seven counties stretching from Shih Chia Chuang to Tsang-chow, by the North China Famine Relief Society.

Chihli, along Tientsin-Pukow R. R., by the Tientsin International Society for Famine Relief;

AIDING FOUR PROVINCES

And further since, up to the present time, there have been no sufficient indications making clear from which organisation relief will be afforded to the following places:

Shansi, Shensi, East Shantung and the remainder of the Chihli and Shantung areas, therefore

(a) This Conference requests the United International Famine Relief Committee to take in hand immediately the centralisation and co-ordination of the hitherto independent forces, and

(b) The various relief organisations in China are all requested to furnish, with the least possible delay, to the above Committee all useful information concerning their activities up to the present, and to clearly state which regions, districts or localities they desire to take charge of in future, and

(c) If the various societies already undertaking certain districts should be short of funds or if the United International Famine Relief Committee is unable to take care of the rest of the famine areas not undertaken by others, then the Central Government and the Provincial Authorities shall be asked to assume full responsibilities.

2. That the Hankow International Famine Relief Committee be requested to make its contributions, whether of money, food or clothing, direct to the provincial Honan Famine Relief Committee; and that a full account of all such contributions be sent by the Hankow Committee to the Peking United International Famine Relief Committee.

3. That this Conference asks the Hankow I. F. R. Committee, in seeking contributions towards the above objects, to include within the sphere of its operations the foreign communities and missionaries in the Yangtsze valley from Wuhu to Ichang, including Hunan Province.

COMMITTEE NAMED

4. That the chairman be authorised to appoint a special Committee to deal with the actual allotment of famine areas, and to see that this is done.

Mr. Liang Shih-i then appointed Mr. Liu Fang and Mr. L. De Luca as the above committee.

5. That Mr. Liang Shih-i and Mr. Wang Ta-hsiem shall continue to represent the Administrative Council of the United International Famine Relief Committee in communication with the Government Famine Bureau concerning the distribution of funds collected by the Government.

6. That the International Committee write official letters to the Tuchuns of the different provinces to release as many railway cars as possible, except the number absolutely necessary for their urgent needs.

7. Regarding transportation of famine supplies of grain, clothing, etc.

(a) That where the authorities in different provinces are able to provide carts and animals for such transportation this be done.

(b) That famine sufferers be also employed, under proper protection, for the relay transport of famine supplies.

(c) That the attention of the Government and of the authorities in all famine regions be called to the necessity for the thorough suppression of robbery and brigandage, as a necessary preliminary to the transport of famine supplies.

8. That the old clothing of students, police and soldiers in the various provinces affected by famine be distributed in their own districts.

MUST BUILD ROADS

9. That it is the sentiment of this conference that road-building should be made a prominent part of the relief program. Where stone is easily available it would advocate the building of macadamised road; but in districts where there is no local stone and it would necessitate the transporting of stone by train or boat so as to limit the transport available for famine supplies it is recommended that good earth roads be constructed.

10. That the Finance Committee be entrusted with the working out of a practical system of accounting, both in Chinese and English, and that this system be printed and sent out to the various societies for bookkeeping; and that these records be afterwards returned to the above Committee for auditing.

11. That forms be printed in Chinese and English to be filled in by individual societies once every ten days, giving all particulars of the work done and of their requirements; and that these returns be sent to the investigating Committee for transmission to other societies.

Hsieh En-lun,
John Griffith,
Minute Secretaries.

PREPARE TABLES

From the mass of detailed information which has now reached the United International Famine Relief Committee it has been possible to compile tables showing the various districts affected, the population in need, and the approximate amount of relief required.

In these tables the Metropolitan Area and the province of Chihli, Honan, Shantung, Shansi and Shensi are included, and, apparently, the districts affected by famine are inhabited by no fewer than fifty-nine and a half millions of people, who are famine stricken in the degrees of "very heavy," "heavy," and "not so heavy."

The following summary of the tables shows the situation pretty clearly, and indicates that over $2,000,000 is required immediately in order to alleviate actual present distress, while a further sum of nearly $5,000,000 is wanted to provide cheap food for that part of the population which is not entirely destitute.

Bermuda Celebrates 300th Anniversary Of Its Assembly

(Reuter's Service)

Hamilton, Bermuda, October 6 (by mail.)—Bermuda has been celebrating the 300th anniversary of the founding of its House of Assembly—one of the oldest representative bodies in existence, and coming next in age to the British Parliament. Bermuda shares with Virginia the honor of possessing the earliest of representative institutions in this side of the Atlantic. Its history is closely linked with that of the Old Dominion.

The first General Assembly for Virginia was held at Jamestown, on July 30, 1619, while the first General Assembly for Bermuda was convened at St. Georges, on August 1, 1620.

When Sir George Somers was wrecked on this island in 1609, he and his company of adventurers were bound for Virginia to settle. But after their unexpected landing in Bermuda they decided to stay on here, and later secured Letters Patent from the Crown, which included the Bermudas in the limits of the Virginia Company.

The tercentenary celebrations concluded with the visit of the Prince of Wales.

A TONIC TREATMENT WHICH CURES LUMBAGO

Lumbago is a form of muscular rheumatism affecting the muscles of the lower part of the back. Damp cold weather frequently brings on an attack. The disease obtains a grip on the system when the blood is thin, and, while it is possible sometimes to soothe the pain, lumbago cannot be corrected until the blood has been built up. Lumbago means that the overworked muscles of the back are undernourished. They need toning up.

The success of the tonic treatment of lumbago is illustrated by the experience of Mr. J. C. Benedict, of No. 1267 West Second Street, Los Angeles, California.

"I began to have muscular pains across my back about three years ago," says Mr. Benedict. "I paid little attention to them at first but they continued getting worse. It was a steady, dull pain and when I stopped to pick anything up my back felt as though I had been cut with a knife. I tired quickly and couldn't sleep well at night.

"A newspaper announcement led me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and before I had taken the remedy a week the pain became less acute. I continued the treatment until the pain entirely disappeared. I feel stronger and better in every way now and sleep soundly. I take long walks and enjoy every minute. I strongly endorse Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a tonic."

Dr Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or direct from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 98 Szechuen Road, Shanghai $1.50 the bottle, $8.00 for six bottles, post free.

French To Occupy Turks' Region Under Mandate

(Reuter's Service)

New York, October 19 (by mail).—French military authorities in Cilicia, Turkey, have informed officials of the Armenian National Union that France is going to occupy the entire region to the full extent of her mandate and that Armenians will be afforded complete protection, according to advices reaching Near East Relief Headquarters here from agents in Aleppo, Syria.

Both Urfa and Mardin, now lying well within admittedly Turkish nationalist territory, are to be occupied, these advices state. Urfa was the scene of a massacre by Turkish nationalists of French forces garrisoning the city last spring.

According to the information received by the relief organisation, the French have sent word to Kemal Pasha, the Nationalist leader, that they have not forgotten this massacre and that, if any further outrages are committed against any Christian, Armenian or otherwise in Urfa, the city will suffer.

Relief officials are inclined to believe that the only solution of the present critical situation in Cilicia is a firmer French policy in holding the occupied areas.

According to the latest information, received at the relief Headquarters conditions are chaotic throughout Cilicia. Where the nationalists are not fighting the French at Aintab, Adana, and neighboring cities, they are persecuting the Armenians. Eighteen Americans are cut off in Adana by the siege that the Nationalists have been conducting against the French garrison since June 28.

Reparations Program Made Up By Allies

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, November 7.—The following are the principal points of procedure to be following by the Allies in regard to carrying out the provisions of the Peace Treaty in regard to reparations:

In the first place, a conference of Allied experts will meet in Brussels to hear the German delegates, and draw up a report to the Reparations Commission.

A conference of Allied Finance Ministers will then meet at Geneva —German delegates being present in a consultative capacity—to examine the amount of the indemnity to be demanded from Germany and her capacity to pay.

The Reparations Commission will thereupon decide the total amount of Germany's obligations, and, finally, the Supreme Council will decide on the penalties to be imposed in the event of Germany failing to fulfil her obligations.

Irish Denounce Home Rule Bill As Now Proposed

(U. S. Naval Radio)

London, Nov. 8.—The Irish home rule bill nearly passed the final stage in the house of commons with the government adding two new clauses which the Irish and Liberal politicians say render the measure practically dead. The clauses provide that the second chamber shall be desolate of parliaments should they become improperly conducted. In other words the measure must run the gauntlet of the Lords.

CHINA UNITED NOW, ASSERTS NEW PREMIER

penditure were published in as detailed a form as possible.

History showed that when a nation had disappeared, it had been due to financial disorder rather than to revolution, internal disturbance or lack of military power. The Government had this in mind, and when the reorganisation of finance had been effected the condition of the people would be improved.

TROOPS UNPAID

Everyone was aware of the Government's difficult position with regard to finance. Many of the troops had not been paid for several months, and various Government Departments were at present almost unable to pay the salaries of the staffs and meet other requirements.

It had been alleged that the main reason for issuing the mandate calling for national unity was the desire of the Central Government to secure loans from foreign countries, but the Premier emphatically denied that the Government had any such thought.

It was, he declared, on account of the Government's measures for the reorganisation of the whole country that a necessity for a loan appeared. The Premier emphasised that if a foreign loan could only be secured which was damaging to the sovereign rights of China, or savored of any political condition, then the Government would confidently rely upon the people themselves to come to their assistance.

The Government was convinced that if it had a good program of reorganisation, and a proper Parliament was in existence, the people would see the necessity for furnishing the money for reorganisation.

FINANCIAL REFORM

Given this financial reform, the people would be able to develop their own particular lines of labor, industrial and agricultural, under the impetus of progress, and there was every hope for a new China.

Finally, the Premier dwelt on the need for education, and in this connection he said the Government would adopt the best educational methods that could be found in the world. Any surplus available from the reduction of the army would be devoted partly to industrial education, and partly to the making of roads and other works of public utility. He also looked to economy and a reduction of annual expenditure to provide the means of extending education, and improving the moral welfare of the children, so as to provide good material for the body politic.

PEACE BY MANDATE

Peking, Nov. 9.—The following is a fair reflection of Chinese and foreign opinion in Peking—which was never so unanimous on any subject as it is at present—regarding the prospects of peace:

When the President, with the advice of the Cabinet, adopted the strange course of proclaiming peace by Mandate, foreign opinion was divided on the subject, but the most experienced among the foreign diplomats converted the sceptics by pointing out that there was much hard commonsense behind the Government's move, and that the formal cancellation of the military Government, even though it was by the defeated party, afforded a legal opportunity too good to be passed over towards opening the way to a general compromise.

It was urged that if the South and South-west wanted peace, there was then nothing to prevent it, whereas a reconstitution of the Canton Government would weaken Hsu Shih-chang and Chun Yun-peng, both of whom were honestly striving for reunion on distinctly non-militarist lines.

MARKS PEACE BEGINNING

It was pointed out that the fall of the Anfuites should have marked the beginning of peace, but those chosen agents of Japan had contracted ties with the so-called Constitutionalists, and the defeat of the former appears only to have incensed the latter.

The Cantonese community in Peking openly support the President and Premier, and do not hesitate to voice their appreciation of the national danger, together with their convictions that the negotiations at Shanghai through Tang Shao-yi are doomed to failure.

Finally, it is urged that the millions who are in the throes of famine, the situations at Urga and Hungchun, the shortage of funds, for which the Provinces are continually appealing to Peking, and China's position at the forthcoming meeting of the League of Nations—all emphasise the necessity of immediate peace and patriotic unity, with which the re-establishment of the Canton Government is incompatible.

Chefoo Notes

(China Press Correspondence)

Chefoo November 4.—A raging storm is going on outside and the temperature as I write has been lowered considerably. Up till last night, when the North wind commenced to blow, we had been having unusually warm weather. It was more like summer than the beginning of winter. The days were really too hot for football and ladies went about in their cottons. But just when residents were feeling "fed up" with the climate wondering what was wrong with the elements, the change came in which a vengeance. All day long it has been blowing "great guns." The seas are fearfully high and work in the harbor is impossible. The Bunding is getting knocked about and parts of it will have been demolished by the morning, if the storm continues for any length of time. The repaired parts seem to be resisting the force of the waves but the old portion reveals signs of distress.

Armistice Day is to be remembered and celebrated. The Chefoo Club is arranging for a tiffin from 1 to 3 and a big dance in the evening or to be more accurate at night. Business houses are to close for the day and the Chaplain is arranging to hold a service in the morning.

The Chefoo Daily News has changed its Editor. Perhaps this should be expressed differently. Mrs. Frank W. Smith who has occupied the editorial chair has now given up. Naturally the Chambers of Commerce, who are responsible for the continuance of the paper, are grateful to her for the able way in which she has kept things going for the last twelve months. Mr. Lyttle of McMullan and Co. is the new editor and he intends to keep things lively in the local thunderer.

There is much grumbling over the electric light. Residents of Chefoo are under the impression that they pay too much for what they receive. The local company has a monoply in Chefoo and it is almost impossible to look for an improvement while things remain as they are at present.

Last Sunday the Japanese community commemorated the natal day of their Emperor. The Japanese flag was prominent but only in the districts where Japanese dwell.

The Settlement eleven lost their match last Saturday being beaten by the School to the tune of three clear goals. As a matter of fact, they were lucky not to have a bigger score piled up against them. Playing for the School were three "Old Boys" and to one of these at least, was due their marked superiority over their opponents. The Settlement eleven was extremely weak and it will have to be strengthened before it can expect to come off victorious against the boys, especially, if what I hear is correct, viz., they are to have the assistance regularly of two of their former pupils.

Tsung Tsoo-ming, the Chinese compositor charged with forging the name of Mr. R. Peyton-Griffin to two compradore orders, appeared on remand in the Mixed Court yesterday and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment. The youth declared that he had forged the orders because he was being pressed to pay debts. He said his father was a compradore of the Standard Oil Company and that when he returned from Hankow he would make good the loss. The court intimated that if the money is refunded a motion for reduction of sentence might be entertained.

Fred L. Moore, 23 years old, a sailor who said he was sent here from Nagasaki by the United States Consul on the chance of finding a berth, appeared in the United States Court for China yesterday on a charge of vagrancy and was ordered to produce bond of $500 in four days or stand sentence as a vagrant. Acting Consul-General M. F. Perkins was complaining witness. He stated that Moore came to him asking assistance on Nov. 1 and was aided after telling his story. The following morning Mr. Perkins was accosted on the Bund by the same seaman, who evidently did not recognise him, and was told an entirely different version of Moore's troubles and advent. Among others Moore accosted were Messrs. Eli Taylor and Paul L. Gross, also of the American Consulate.

Helps Build Red Blood

"The tremendous energy and physical strength of the healthy, red-blooded man often gives him a great advantage over those others who may be weak, nervous and falling behind—simply because their blood lacks iron," says Dr. Ferdinand C. "To help build strong, keen men, physically able to climb to the top of their business or profession, there is nothing in my opinion so valuable as pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron. "LONG SHOTS" MAKE GOOD WHEN RAIN SOAKS TRACK; WHITE'S SENSATIONAL RIDE

Hitch, On "Tivoli," Defeats F ield Of 28—Hill Scores In Morning—"Old Bill' Mak es Way Into Big Race With Help Of J. Pluvius—"T he Curlew" Beaten Again

By "Grandstand"

Ol' Captain Jinx, Imperial High Giasticutus at the throne of Hoodoos, took charge of affairs at the Race Course yesterday afternoon; with the result that several all-but-unknown ponies will probably contest with the favorites in today's "Champions"—and none but the gods on high Olympus know which will win.

Captain Jinx opened his day with a drizzling rain, which, on top of Monday's downfall, rendered the Race Course track entirely undependable and sent the Celestial Dope scurrying to cover.

The redoubtable Captain then proceeded to compel the best laid plans o' ponies and men to gang agley. He knocked "logical contenders" into the discard; shook the public faith in all the "top-hole" riders; ordered "rank outsiders" into the fore; and generally raised the deuce with all save his favored few.

Perhaps the most surprising upset of the day was in the seventh race (The Racing Stakes) when Messrs. Winsome & Hasty's highly-touted pony, The Curlew, with "Billy" Hill on board, again failed to qualify for the "Champions."

THE CURLEW FAILS AGAIN

A rumor has gone aboard to the effect that the Winsome & Hasty stable, favored for many weeks past by the close students of racing, had been generally overtrained. This certainly seems to be the case with The Curlew, which has bowed in turn to King's Cross and Hightide, which beat him by a good length and a half yesterday afternoon.

True for you, Mr. Hill had just previously carried The Kite and The Hawk, from this popular stable, to well-earned victories in the Kalgan Plate and the Northern Cup—but the defeat of The Curlew, and The Oriole, and The Eagle, were distinct disappointments to the owners, Mr. Hill and his adoring public.

BIG DIVIDENDS FEATURE

"Long shots" featured the second afternoon's racing entertainment, commencing with the win of The Kite (Mr. Hill) in the Kalgan, paying those who were fortunate enough to choose him the neat sum of $72.70 on a single ticket.

Mr. "Gussie" White, who had the mount on Mr. Wakelam's grey pony Marlow in the eighth race (The Sycee Stakes) went Mr. Hill much better when he rated his horse along at such a clever pace that the latter won by four lengths from fourteen other entrants, paying the luscious price of $312.50 for the win.

The "long shot" climax of the day, however, came in the concluding seven-furlong dash, in which there were no less than 29 starters. In this event Mr. Hitch, astride Mr. Bahnchild's bay pony Tivoli, romped home a winner by half a length, to pay his admirers the neat little sum of $786.90 per ticket.

ATTENDANCE LARGE

Despite the heavy track and the uncompromising weather, the attendance at the second day of the Autumn Meeting was large and the fields of starters were even larger. Thirty-one ponies faced Starter Middleton in the opening event of the day, while twenty-nine (as heretofore mentioned) started in the final race.

One of the most sensational gallops of the afternoon was that of The Ameer (late The Bulbul), which all but ran away with the Lama Miau two-mile scamper. This plucky little front-runner, with Mr. Heard in the saddle, opened up a gap of twenty lengths soon after the beginning of the long race and held the lead until the last furlong, when he gave way before the determined challenge of Colinton.

"RECS" DEFEAT NANYANG TEAM BY TWO GOALS

Rain Causes Postponement Of Many Games; Others Due This Afternoon

By "Whistle"

A splendid football mamtch was played yesterday between the Shanghai "Recs" and Nanyang College, the "Recs" winning by a score of 3 goals to 1.

The match was played on the College Ground and a splendid game resulted. The surprising thing was that the college put up such a fine fight against the "Recs," who turned out in strength with the exception of their outside left, and as this deficiency was supplied by Mr. A. H. Leslie of the Shanghai F. C., the college had a very stiff proposition to tackle.

This they set out to do and despite the fact that one or two of their regular team were "crocked" after Saturday's game they made the "Recs" work hard for victory.

The ground was on the soft side, but good and the rain held off, and both teams took advantage of the ideal conditions to play fast clean football.

At the interval the "Recs" were two up, but on resumption, Nanyang demanded more share in the proceedings and both teams scored one goal apiece.

The college should have scored a second, but one can only say the Fates were unkind and they had to be content with their one goal and the consciousness that the "Recs" had to go all the way.

An enthusiastic crowd of about 600, witnessed the game and it is a healthy sign that Soccer is being so appreciated and so well played by the Chinese students. Mr. R. R. Jones acted as Referee.

THE GAME TODAY

The following team has been selected to represent the Shanghai Football Club's first eleven against a team from H.M.S. Hawkins on the Nanyang College Ground today. Kick off at 3 o'clock:

Messrs. Bertes, Forshaw, Harris, Bennett, Shaffer Weeks, Goldman, Lawrie Smith, Robertson, Voulcher, Leslie.

Reserves Messrs. Wakefield and Serodkin.

Mr. Fulton will referee the game.

Cars conveying the team will leave the corner of Nanking Road and the Bund at 2:15 p.m. sharp.

The Game Of Golf

(By A Club Member)

Golf is without doubt the most intensely fascinating of games, but the unfortunate part about it as a sport is the immense amount of ground needed to play the game, when compared with the space needed to play other games. Whereas two or three dozen men may play bowls upon a small patch of ground, golf requires many acres. Cricket, baseball, and football may be played in a small corner of a golf course, and the space occupied hardly noticed.

A golfer needs space, and he needs seclusion with his opponent. There is something of a stand-up fight without witnesses that gives golf a manly interest. As such the golfer requests that he be not embarrassed by the actions or opinions of other parties. He requests to be left alone with nature and his opponent.

That being so the entire brains of every golf committee is taxed to the utmost in the attempt to provide players with the maximum of comfort during play.

FOUR MINUTES' START

In providing comfort for members in actual play the committee has at the same time to consider the necessities of members waiting to play. After much experience this has been decided by giving each pair four minutes' start. Less than this would mean more discomfort to the players on the course; more time would mean greater exasperation to the members desirous of entering the round.

Kiangwan golf course is just a mile and 200 yards long when reckoned between tees and holes, and it would be a reasonable estimate to assume that each player walks on an average something over four miles in a round of 18 holes. This is accomplished in about one and three-quarter hours. There are thus about 26 couples permitted to be on the course at one time. With the enormous membership of the club it will be readily seen that the committee have much to do to please those waiting to play.

A GREAT DIFFICULTY

The greatest difficulty the Committee has to contend with are the attempts by members to indulge in three-ball and four-ball games. The frequency of the attempts to break the rule forbidding these games during the crush hours only proves the popularity of this form of golf.

There is no doubt that foursomes, whether two-ball or four-ball, have great charm for many players. Unfortunately in the two-ball game the alternate strokes have a demoralising influence upon the players, inasmuch as the player does not get nerved up to the same sense of responsibility as in singles. He may get disgusted with the result of his partner's efforts, and the division of responsibility regarding the loss of a hole certainly tends to inferior play. At the same time a two-ball foursome is really quicker than a singles game, and as such ought to be encouraged so as to relieve the congestion of members waiting to tee off at No. 1.

It is the four-ball foursome that presents the greatest problem, as this is the form of play which appeals to so many players in the afternoon, especially after they have had a strenuous round of singles in the morning. The ambitious and challenging spirit of each player demands that he play the round without assistance, so that his performance may be judged correctly, whether for better or worse. It is this spirit which makes the two-ball foursome so undesirable.

SUGGESTS NEW SYSTEM

To overcome the slow progression of the four-ball foursome and the unsatisfactory results of the two-ball game, and at the same time making foursome a means of relieving the waiting crowd without inconveniencing the other players on the course, a new system of playing foursomes might be adopted.

An ideal system of foursome play would be for the four players to divide up into sides of two each, and for one pair to challenge the other, each hole to be played outright by the two players who teed off. To do this each player would play two holes in succession, after one of the players of the first hole had fallen out for a couple of holes. Each player would thus play nine full holes out of the 18, and would take the entire responsibility of winning or losing such holes.

The advantages of this system of play are very apparent. Besides placing the fate of each hole definitely in the hands of a couple of players, it would give the poorer player a chance of being watched and coached by the better player, should such be acceptable. The speed of travel would be equal to that of a singles match.

HANDICAP THE SAME

In regard to handicapping the same handicap as applied to singles would be in effect; that is the stronger player would allow

Straits Cricketers Bat Heartily Against Colony Bowlers; Look Like Winners

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Hongkong, November 9.—The second match of the Interport cricket series was begun today, Singapore opposing Hongkong.

Singapore batted first. The score at the luncheon interval was 165 for 5 wickets (E. J. Riches 62; A. A. Claxton 18; Dr. W. W. Martin 16). Hongkong's bowling was ineffective.

After tiffin the remaining five Singapore wickets fell for the addition of 91 runs, the innings closing for 256.

Towards this total A. E. Holmes Brown contributed 56 and V. E. H. Rhodes 29, while the extras amounted to 37. There was not a single batsman in the team to make a "duck."

Hongkong then opened their first innings, and at close of play had lost six wickets for 101, for which fact the faultless fielding of the Singapore side was largely responsible.

The top score was that of T. E. Pearce, who was clean bowled after hitting up 56. The two not-outs are Major Edwards and R. L. D. Wodehouse.

HOBBS'S HUNDREDS

PLAN ONE MAJOR LEAGUE IN PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL; COMPLETE UPHEAVAL SEEN

Sensational Change In Policy Of American National Game —Means Formation Of Single Twelve-Team Organisation

By "Jay Bee"

The most sensational announcement that has burst upon the sporting world in the last decade—at least insofar as Americans are concerned—is contained in a U. S. Naval wireless message received last night which tells of the complete reorganisation of professional baseball in the United States.

The message is dated from Chicago, scene of the recent investigations with regard to the World's series scandal of 1919, and reads as follows:

"Major leagues here today broken and twelve-club league formed, composed of eight National League teams, three American League teams and a twelfth to be chosen later from a minor league."

FOLLOWS EXPOSURE

The shake-up obviously follows in consequence of the World's series corruption of last year, when players of the Chicago American League team are alleged to have accepted bribes from a gambling coterie to throw crucial games to the Cincinatti National league team, a scandal which astounded the American public and dealt the national game a staggering blow.

The proposed substitution of one major league for the previous two undoubtedly means the bringing together of teams from the same eleven big cities which have previously enjoyed major league baseball, and the inclusion of some other city now probably represented in the International league or the American Association.

CIVILIAN TRIBUNAL

The three cities alloted to the American League are evidently those which formerly did not boast also National League nines—Detroit, Cleveland and Washington.

It is probable, judging from the proposals which were made following the Chicago investigation, that the management of the new organisation will be in the hands of a commission of public men, of the type of General Pershing, General Wood or Wm. G. McAdoo; and that the old Commissions which handled the destinies of the American and National Leagues, will pass out of existence.

Followers of the game in the Far East will await with anxious interest further particulars of the new scheme.

Willard Will Box To Recoup Fortune

If reports from the middle West as to Jess Willard's business ventures are reliable—and they come from a trustworthy source—the former champion has a strong incentive to return to the ring.

According to the revelations Willard's oil investments have turned out so badly that the $300,000 the Kansan earned in the ring and in circus work since he took the title from Jack Johnson has dwindled to a serious extent.

It is alleged that Willard dropped $96,000 in one oil deal alone, and he feels that he must recoup his shattered fortunes through the medium of pugilism.

There is not the slightest doubt that Willard has been in training for some time past, for numerous persons have seen him at work, and he unquestionably seeks another bout with Dempsey, not because of a desire to reverse the Toledo decision but for the benefit of his depleted treasury.

Willard may take on some other boxer for his first effort, but the goal of his ambition is another contest with the present champion.

Lost Twelve Pounds In Football Contest

The Autumn weather in America has not been very kind to college football players, for the Weather Man has been dishing up an assortment of mid-season baseball temperatures unsuitable for use on the gridiron. With the baseball fans calling for the continuance of Indian summer and the football followers howling for a snappy atmosphere, the Weather Man is "up against it for fair."

Last Saturday, according to reports from various colleges, some of the football players lost as much as twelve pounds each. Losses of eight pounds were quite common. At Penn State, which defeated Muhlenburg by 27 to 7, Beck and Hess of the State outfit lost twelve pounds per touchdown. Several Navy men lost eight pounds each in scrimmage last Friday.

his opponent three-fourths of the difference between their official handicaps, the strokes to be taken at the holes stated on the score cards.

A full match would consist of 36 holes being played, during which each player would play 18 definite holes. The return match would be another 36 holes, so arranged that at the finish of the match and return match each player would have contested a full 36 holes individually. Each player would have played every hole of the course against each opponent, and would have received and allowed strokes exactly as in singles play. Each player could also compare his full 18 holes score with every other individual player, including that of his partner.

HOW IT WORKS

Below we give a sample foursome under this scheme, in which A and B play C and D, showing where each player gives or receives a stroke. It is arranged as a score card so that members may cut it out and give the scheme a practical trial.

It will be noticed that the aggregate official handicap of both sides is 21, and that whereas A and B have the advantage of one stroke in the first match, C and D receive one stroke in the return match.

Final Survey Of Lunghai Road Made

(China Press Correspondence)

Haichowfu, Ku.—Since completing arrangements last summer for the loan to complete the Lunghai railway to Haichow, the management has been active in getting things in shape for construction. The final survey of route has just been made, the right of way is in process of being purchased, and plans are being made for labor improvements to take care of the shipping. It is expected that actual construction work will begin soon after the New Year.

The King Boh Presbytery adjourned last night after a week's session in the Hsunchowfu Presbyterian Church. The most important work done was the licensure of three young men to preach, and the examination for ordination of a fourth.

Three of these men are graduates of the Nanking Theological Semmary and one of the Shantung Semmary. The Presbytery declined the invitation of the Shantung Presbyteries to unite with them in the establishment of a new Theological Semmary at Tsinanfu.

Canton Cholera Is Found At Hongkong

Hongkong, Nov. 9.—At today's meeting of the Sanitary Board the Medical Officer of health reported three imported cases of cholera from Canton. There was, he said, no doubt that cholera existed in Canton and its environs, and it was to be expected that cases would occur in Hongkong, as cases in the incubative state might come to the colony.

Inquest Is Held Following Killing Of Chinese Girl

Sailor Of West Henshaw Held Here To Answer Charge Of Murder

With the recommendation that Jack Leo Welsh, second assistant engineer of the steamer West Henshaw, be held for criminal prosecution in the United States Court for China, Assessor Tenney and Magistrate Yui, at the Mixed Court, yesterday closed the inquest over the body of the Chinese woman shot in a Fearon Road brothel last Sunday morning. Major C. P. Holcomb, United States District Attorney, stated that a charge of murder would be brought tomorrow morning.

The verdict was to the effect that the woman died of a gunshot wound inflicted by a pistol in the possession of the sailor.

Welsh's companions on the night of the tragedy, two of the crew of the West Henshaw, told what they knew of it at the inquest without, however, being able to supply an explanation of how it happened. The police officers who arrested the trio also testified.

(Reuter's Service)

New York, October 21 (by mail).—The London correspondent of the Associated Press writes:

Paper suits of clothing, manufactured in Germany, have been shipped to London on approval and displayed for sale by a firm of importers in the Strand at two shillings and sixpence to ten shillings and sixpence, a suit.

It is stated that German exporters are offering these suits to British importers at the rate of 1,000 suits for £120 or the normal equivalent of about sixty cents a suit. They are described as of "the very best paper texture." Other quotations would permit English retailers to obtain from 200 to 300 percent profit.

GENERAL PRAISED

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, November 8.—In notifying General Franchet d'Esperey of the termination of his duties as Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies in the East, the Minister of War renewed to the general the expression of the gratitude of his country and Government for the eminent service he has rendered the cause of France and her Allies in the East.

The Ideal Saline

Forms a sparkling, effervescing, refreshing, invigorating, and pleasant-tasting drink, with no objectionable saltiness, no depressing, lowering effects upon the nerves or spirits, and of guaranteed purity and harmlessness.

A highly concentrated compound artificially reproducing the essential constituents of famous medicinal springs.

Unlike many salines, morning powders and patent medicines, Alkia Saltrates is extremely palatable to drink, never irritates the kidneys nor produces lowering after-effects. As an eliminant of uric acid and other impurities from the system, this is probably the most thorough and quickest acting substance known to the medical profession at the present time. For any stomach, liver or kidney disorder there is nothing better.

Notes From Boone University And St. Hilda's

(China Press Correspondence)

Hankow, Nov. 2.—The time is fastly approaching when a considerable expansion of the plant of the University will be called for. Two things have delayed the erection of the Lambeth Hall, the gift of the Pan-Anglican Fund; first the failure as yet to obtain a suitable site for it, and second, the numbers in the College did not demand expansion. This was, of course, due to the fact that the old Hospital building was made over to the Boy Scouts, releasing the old St. Hilda's School (for girls) building for use as college classrooms. All of the Ingle Hall, the old College building, with the exception of one classroom, has been given over entirely to be used as a College dormitory.

This fall eighty-five students have enrolled themselves in the College, so that after the extra rooms in the Divinity School have been filled with College students there yet remain four students without accommodation. Temporary quarters are being erected in the central lecture hall of Ingle Hall for six men.

So far three hundred and thirty students have entered the Middle School. Of these forty-seven are in the highest class, and seventy-eight in the next highest class. The latter is that for which most of the subsidiary schools prepare their students. At present there are five schools in the Wuhan center preparing students for this grade. These schools have a total enrollment of from seven to eight hundred students.

The College students are well distributed in the various courses offered. There are ten students in the Divinity School and there are eight more students who are taking beginning Greek, which means that they are seriously contemplating entering the ministry. There are more than ten students taking the Library course and sixteen taking the commercial course. Only in the science group is there an insufficient number to make effective classes, and this is the more to be regretted because it is not possible to double classes in the science work as may be done in the arts work. Some might think that the small number in the science group shows that there is but little need for the science building. But as a matter of fact this simply shows the urgent need for the new science building; for with the present science equipment either students go elsewhere for their science work, or else they think it more worth while to enter some other course.

It is hoped that work may soon begin on the University Gymnasium. It has been decided to place the swimming pool at the side of the gymnasium in order to get it on a higher level and to obtain as much sun as possible to warm and purify the water. Mr. Bergamini has proposed an exterior in Chinese style which seems to be approved by every one.

During the past year the University has suffered much at the hands of the Wuchang Electric Light Company. It has long been decided in the minds of all that the University should have to have a plant of its own. It required much time to come to a decision as to the type and size of the plant needed. At last a contract has been concluded with Andersen, Meyer and Company, and it is hoped that the plant may be installed within the present month. At present the University is without electric light and have had to install gasoline lamps for the study rooms.

Rev. F. E. A. Shepherd, a graduate of Oxford University, and his wife were added to the staff of the University at the end of last term. Miss Wentworth has come out to teach French just as Mr. Walker is compelled to give all his time to the Divinity School. Mr. Frank A. Gray, an agricultural specialist, has been added to the staff. He will spend the present year at the Nanking Language School, and in consultation with the School of Agriculture and Forestry of the University of Nanking, will work out a plan for the extension of their work in this center.

Boone possesses a first class moving picture machine which exhibits pictures in the most satisfactory way. Several films have been presented and it is hoped that ere long arrangements will be made with a world-wide Educational Film Association, known as the Bureau of Commercial Economics, to receive and exhibit to all the people of Wuchang many useful films.

The University Y.M.C.A. is doing very effective work at present. One of their committees assisted all students at the jetties and in the compound in the first three days of the term. They are now carrying on servants classes in the night. At the last general social, several students gave an exhibition of Chinese boxing.

Two plays will be staged by the students and faculty of Boone University in the Hain Min Theater, Hankow, on November 6, in aid of famine relief work for the northern provinces. One play "The American Hustler in China" will be half in English, and two foreign members of the Boone staff will take part.

* * *

The School opened for the fall term with more girls than can be comfortably accommodated despite the fact that many have been turned away. All available rooms have been occupied showing the steady growth of St. Hilda's.

A normal class of 19 students has been added to the school in addition to the Primary and Middle school classes. In the absence of any trained teacher to take charge, this class is more or less a makeshift; but the girls seem earnest and cannot help gaining some advantage from this extra year. It is interesting to note that two thirds are paying their own fees—at least $40 a year.

The Middle enrollment this fall is 50 of whom five expect to graduate in June. Of those in the Middle School last year, three have gone to the Kindergarten Training Department of the Hunan Girls High School, two going at their own charges.

One of the St. Hilda's teachers has gone to the College of Arts and Science for Women of Peking University, (formerly North China Union Woman's College) for her preliminary medical course.

Three highly qualified American teachers have been added to St. Hilda's staff; Miss Harriet Cobb, Professor of Mathematics at Smith College, who is taking Middle School mathematics classes; Miss Anne Elisabeth Hebel, Instructor in Mathematics at Elgin Junior College, who is teaching English; and Miss Crosby, who has returned and is taking charge of the music.

RIFLE OR PLOW IS EDICT GIVEN ARGENTINE BOYS

Young Men Who Do Not Go Into Army Will Be Put On Farms, Says Bill

(Reuter's Service)

Buenos Aires, Sept. 15 (by mail).—Compulsory farming is provided for in a bill just introduced in the Chamber of Deputies with the idea of forming an economic army, to be composed of the youth of Argentina who are not called into the army and navy under the conscription law. If this measure is enacted, every young man in the country who does not take up a rifle or go to sea will be set to raising wheat and doing other farm labor.

Although compulsory service is in force in Argentina, only a small part of the young men actually go into the services at present, these being selected by lot, and, as a result, according to the Nacion, there is some dissatisfaction because of the exemptions. If the new law is passed, says the newspaper, it will result in the cheapening of foodstuffs, and some of the vast tracts of uncultivated public land in Argentina can be put to producing food.

AT NINETY-SEVEN STILL VIGOROUS

Lord Halsbury, Tory Extremist, Long A Notable Figure Among British Statesmen

London, September 25.—The Earl of Halsbury, who was Tory Lord Chancellor through three Administrations, recently celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday. As Hardings Stanley Giffard he was called to the English bar, rapidly acquired an extensive criminal practice, and took a prominent part in politics.

Halsbury has returned to London from the seashore and may be seen every morning taking a constitutional in Hyde Park. He is in perfect possession of all his faculties except hearing, which is failing.

He became Solicitor General and afterward Attorney General under Lord Salisbury, to whom his vigorous reactionaryism warmly commended him. In 1885 he was created a Baron, and in 1908 was promoted to be an Earl. Always he has been a man of the strongest convictions and never lacked the courage of them.

When Lloyd George was passing his revolutionary budgets Lord Halsbury led the attack on them in the Lords, and subsequently was the leader of the "die-hards," who were for fighting the Parliament Act (restricting the veto power of the Lords), even to the point of forcing the King to create sufficient new Peers to carry the measure. The "die-hards" were broken up at last, but Lord Halsbury and a few more supported by the Morning Post were irreconcilable.

Lord Halsbury as Lord Chancellor was the constant butt of Henry Labouchere, who never tired of criticising him. Labouchere set out to show that Lord Halsbury exhausted all his own relations and connections before he gave anything away outside this charmed circle, and he was always described in Truth as "the Lord High Jobber." A man of amazing physical and mental vigor he spoke in the Lords at the last session, his voice being strong and resonant his views violently reactionary and quite uncompromising.

His eldest son, Lord Tiverton by his second wife, was born in 1880, and practised at the bar.

Lord Halsbury was made Lord Chancellor first in 1885. Between his $50,000 a year while in office and his pension of $30,000 when out of office, he has drawn $1,390,000 from the state.

...il Producers Are Threatened By Solons

(Reuter's Service)

New York, Nov. 6.—Senators Calder and Edge, members of the Senate Committee on Reconstruction, have made the statement that unless the coal industry reforms itself and cuts down prices to a reasonable figure by December 6, they intend to introduce a bill in Congress, providing for the most stringent regulation of every branch of the coal business.

They add that "the industry stands convicted of practising gross extortion on the public of the whole country."

JAPANESE FIRMS MAY FORM NEW SHIP COMBINE

Vice-Minister Of Communications Agrees Single Group Would Be Impracticable

MUST AID TRAMPERS, TOO

If Latest Plan Is Successful, N.Y.K. And O.S.K. Lines Will Form Nuclei

(Japan Advertiser)

Tokio, October 25.—The unofficial Government proposal for the amalgamation of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, and the Kokusai Kisen Kaisha still hangs fire, though the authorities have been carrying on vigorous propaganda in favor of it. All the shipping companies in principle support the proposal, but it is quite another matter whether it can be carried out in practice. The reason is that though there is not so much difference in the capitals of the companies concerned, there is a vast difference between their business positions and financial standings. Some shipping men brand the proposal of the Government as an empty dream, and take the stand that it is devoid of all elements of feasibility. Of the four companies mentioned, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the Osaka Shosen Kaisha are in a better position than the other companies. If shipping concerns are to be amalgamated, the best plan, in the opinion of the shipping experts, is to establish two large companies,—one with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha as a nucleus while the center of the other is to be the Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

A similar view is entertained by Mr. Kakichi Uchida, former Vice-Minister of Communications, who prepared the ground for the establishment of the Kokusai Kisen Kaisha last year and who represented the Japanese Government at the International Seamen's Conference at Genoa. His opinion follows:

ONE HUGE COMPANY

"The question of the amalgamation of shipping companies in this country is of grave importance, having, as it does, a vital bearing on the destiny of the country's mercantile marine. But I regret that no authoritative opinion has yet been expressed on this important question.

"The Government urges that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the Kokusai Kisen Kaisha, and other shipping companies should be amalgamated into a huge company with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha as a nucleus. This is merely an idealistic proposal, which entirely ignores the history and business condition of the companies concerned. It is impossible to expect this ideal to materialise.

AMERICA'S POLICY NOT CLEAR

"It admits of no doubt, however, that the greater the economic power, the easier will be management, and this is evidenced by the actual state of affairs in Great Britain and America. Even before the restoration of peace, efforts were made in Great Britain to amalgamate shipping companies, and at present the P. and O. Company has a fleet of 2,000,000 tons, while the fleets of the Royal Mail Steamship Company and the Cunard Line amount to 1,000,000 tons each. It is by no means to their interest that small companies should compete with each other, as in Japan. America has not yet taken any thorough-going shipping policy, but there is little doubt that concert measures for great shipping development will be taken before long, and such measures may be a serious menace to Japan's shipping. Japan should take proper steps to meet the situation before it is too late.

WANT NO MONOPOLY

"It is very difficult to amalgamate the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the Osaka Shosen Kaisha because of their traditions, but if either company is to take over the interests of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha and the Kokusai Kisen Kaisha, the task will not be very difficult. It is better thus to arrange for the establishment of two great companies, one under the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the other under the Osaka Shosen Kaisha. If all the four companies are amalgamated into one company, as is apparently intended by the Government, some day there will arise many evils of monopoly and it will be very difficult to check the evil tendency. It is by no means to the interest of the state to amalgamate the four companies; if the proposed amalgamation is to be effected along the lines I have outlined it will be possible to attain the object without experiencing any great difficulty.

"Along with the amalgamation of shipping companies, it is also necessary to unify the various shipping lines and make the operation of tramp steamers easier and more economical."

Sungkiang Notes

(China Press Correspondence)

Sungkiang, November 9.—Rev. R. A. Dickenson, D.D. has been a week-end visitor to Sungkiang. Rev. Dickenson is visiting China for the first time and is returning to America on the steamer Nile. His home is in Colorado Springs, Colorado, where he has a large church. While in Sungkiang he made his headquarters with Rev. A. C. Bowen, who was a college school mate some 20 years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis of Shanghai, were also visitors in Sungkiang this week-end.

A quarrel in a down town shop the other day almost caused a riot and the disturbance was stopped with difficulty. A soldier was trying to buy something in the shop and was trying to pass some scrip. The shopmen were a little doubtful as to its value and when the investigation was started the soldier struck the shopman. The other men in the shop took their partner's side and a free-for-all fight followed. The passers-by on the street took up the quarrel and the soldier got pretty well battered up. A group of soldiers came up and things were getting quite general when the police managed to quell the affair. The wounded soldier was carried off to the camp hospital where he is recovering from the beating he got. The Northern soldiers are apparently not very well liked by the people in Sungkiang, and the people seem well able to cope with the situation.

is a virtue in a motor truck, more than in any other form of mechanical transportation. The degree of year-in and year-out efficiency in a motor truck is measured by its owner in dollars and cents. Before a wise buyer, therefore, listens to the salesman he is going to satisfy himself from a reliable source of the truck's previous performances. In Hell Hole Swamp

by Octavus Roy Cohen

THE croaking of a thousand frogs told of the coming of night in Hell Hole swamp, and a lone owl hooted sadly from the topmost branches of a stunted pine. From every tree the long, gray moss dropped disconsolately, hanging in great, cloudlike bunches from the barren branches; the water lilies floated, motionless, in a putrid mass of green slime. Small, vicious mosquitoes droned in swarms which were visible to the naked eye, even in the failing light, as they swirled and eddied in living currents of tantalizing monotone. A huge water moccasin uncoiled and slid silently into the stagnant water from the root of a decayed stump.

From afar there came the sloshing splash of water—it grew louder; a negro dashed through the barren undergrowth, ploughed through the slime and threw himself wearily on the root which had been occupied by the snake a few minutes previously.

The man was short and stocky; his huge corded muscles stood out in bold relief from his glistening flesh, his tremendous, clawlike hands opened and closed convulsively; and he breathed in short, whistling, labored gasps, his right hand resting for a moment on his heaving chest. His clothes were in rags, the remains of a single suspender holding the torn trousers in place. He wore neither shoes nor stockings, and his legs and feet were trickling blood from a number of tiny, ugly wounds.

His face was distorted with terror as he stood motionless and listened intently; and then, satisfied, he lay back against the stump. His eyes, wild with fear, roved restlessly, peering through the swiftly gathering gloom. Through the moss bunches above, the rays of the setting sun made a valiant effort to force their way, and the little glen looked like a cave interior.

A frog, perched on a root, watched the negro attentively for a few seconds, croaked defiantly and disappeared; once more the owl hooted, and the man leaped to his feet in terror, then, recognizing the sound, he sank again to the ground, his tense muscles relaxing, but in his eyes there remained the awful look of the hunted animal.

Before the sheriff's office an excited crowd had gathered, motley and eager, armed for the man hunt. The best and the worst were there, armed alike, all prompted by one motive, each intent on the same end. In the doorway stood the sheriff, gun in hand.

His olive-drab shirt was open at the collar, disclosing a bull-like neck, corded thickly with muscle; two revolvers swung easily at his belt, while in a hip pocket an ugly clasphnife rested in a fanciful leather sheath. He wore high hunting boots; his felt hat was pulled well down over his forehead; a huge canteen of water hung by a strap from his shoulder; a small knapsack was fastened securely to his broad back; and the pockets of his shirt were filled with buckshot shells. He was speaking, forcing attention with his resonant voice and steely eyes as he faced the group before him.

"You fellows better get back home. I'm a-goin' after this nigger alone, an' I'll git him if it takes ten years."

The crowd murmured, but softly, for it knew the sheriff.

"He's yonder in Hell Hole," volunteered one. "It's foolish to go alone."

"I've done it before an' I know the swamp as well as him. An' you-all ain't a-comin' 'cause there ain't a-goin' to be no lynchin'."

"Lynching," said one, "is too good."

"I agree with you, brother." The sheriff singled out the speaker with his eye. "But this yere nigger comes back with me, an' he gits a fair tri'l."

The primitive instinct of the mob was uppermost; the men talked among themselves.

"He'll get no fair tri'l in this yere town, she'iff," said the spokesman. "That nigger'll hang time he sets foot yere."

"No, boys." The sheriff talked as he would have spoken to children. "The nigger's comin' back with me—an' you ain't a-goin' to lynch him."

A horse, foam-flecked and weary, rattled through the village, raising a blinding dust cloud as it clattered through the dry sand. Its rider pulled up sharply at the door of the sheriff's office and leaped lightly from the saddle, throwing the reins to a lanky negro, who, with distended eyes, stood, fascinated, listening to the talk of the infuriated men.

Tall and ungainly of figure, the newcomer forced instant attention. His was the rugged face of the Carolina farmer, set with iron determination and unappeasable anger, and his beady eyes sparkled a menace from beneath the black, bushy brows. A revolver peeped forth from his hip; in his right hand he carried an automatic shotgun. The crowd recognized him and made way. He faced the sheriff, eyes blazing.

"Whar you goin'?" he demanded hoarsely.

"After that—nigger." The sheriff was calm.

"You stop here," threateningly; "he's my man."

"I'm a-goin'," I said. "an' I don't need no help."

"I ain't offerin' of no help. I'm a-goin' to kill that beast an' I won't stand no she'iff buttin' in, neither!"

The sheriff smiled grimly. "I'm goin'," he said simply.

"Better not!" The man had advanced as he spoke, and now faced the sheriff squarely. Their eyes met unwaveringly in a clash of indomitable wills.

"Why?"

"He—he was—my—li'l boy, she'iff," the voice of the big farmer broke and he finished fiercely, as though ashamed of his feeling, "an' I'll kill that—or he'll git me; one."

"You can't come with me."

"I ain't a-reckoned on goin' with you. I'm goin' now an' I'm goin' alone; an' I give you fair warnin', she'iff, don't you interfere!"

He turned on his heel and strode rapidly away, first gruffly ordering the lanky negro to stable his tired horse.

Silently the crowd watched his progress down the street as he swung along swiftly, looking neither to the right nor left, and a hum of speculation started.

"That's the pore kid's daddy," volunteered one to a traveling man. "The little feller was murdered an' they've gone into Hell Hole swamp after the nigger. They'll git him, too."

Ten minutes later the sheriff, alone, disappeared into the swamp.

For a long, long time the negro remained on the mouldy seat listening, and occasionally he wiped the beads of sweat from his fevered forehead. He unsheathed a long, dangerous-looking knife and gingerly tested the razor-edge blade.

"They were locked in death embrace, struggling like madmen amidst slime and mud and water."

by bloodshot eyes gleaming devilishly.

Once he drew it gently across the ball of his thumb and cursed softly when the keen edge made a fine incision; then he looked dumbly, half-frightened, at the thin stream of blood and washed his thumb in the slimy water. From his hip pocket he produced a bottle of moonshine whiskey and drank deeply, grunting like an animal as he lay back, temporarily content and bereft of fear.

But the horror of the chase grew in him once again, and he arose restlessly, for he knew the calibre of the two men who were his inevitable pursuers, and he shuddered as he thought of their reputation as swamp rangers; he knew that these two only, of all the white men in two counties, knew every pitfall and deathbog in Hell Hole swamp.

With the unreasoning fear of the pursued he wanted to run, run; whither, he knew not, but his instinct carried him farther and farther through the gloom into the centre of the droning, croaking, hooting terror of darkness.

Night settled noiselessly, like a huge mantle, over Hell Hole swamp, and dread filled the fugitive's heart. His terror was more unreasoning than before, for, in the manner of his kind, he feared the darkness—feared it with a deep, unreasoning dread, an inherent terror. He could not recognize the night as his ally, and he stumbled on and on, splashing through the water, slipping constantly, stopping every few seconds to listen, his eyes gleaming unnaturally the while.

He cursed as he crashed and splashed his way in a huge circle. He cursed because he was afraid, and then because he continually stumbled and fell, for the night was dark; the negro could not see the moon, and the stars which studded the heavens were invisible above the impenetrable mantle of gray moss. He cursed that moss; it was typical of the swamp, and he knew it, but it shut out the light. His legs bled profusely where the cruel leafless undergrowth slashed at him.

Onward he stumbled, quaffing from the whiskey flask in his pocket. Then terror of the darkness overcame his fear of detection, and he cut and lighted a pine-knot torch, holding it high above his head, illuminating the swamp clearly within the radius of a few feet.

Beyond the narrow circle of light he could see nothing; the torch in his hand only served to make the blackness more dense.

Muttering imprecations and mouthing scraps of prayer, talking incoherently to himself, he crouched low and waded on, swinging through the shallow water with a long, low, apish stride, holding the torch above him. He discerned the splash of pursuing feet and halted, every nerve strained.

A revolver cracked sharply a short distance away; the bullet spanked into the trunk of a tree not three feet from his head!

The nerveless fingers spasmodically released their hold on the blazing torch, and it plunged into the water, where its flame died with a hopeless, sizzling gurgle.

The negro ran swiftly, with long, splashing, shuffling, sliding strides. At the corners of his mouth tiny flecks of foam appeared.

The sheriff turned into the swamp near the railroad track which marked one of the boundaries of the town. He knew the inherent cunning of his quarry and he went prepared for any emergency.

The sheriff knew that no man could pick a path through that infested fastness at night; and he walked slowly and almost noiselessly, choosing his footings with care, ready for instant action, intent on capture, as through the fever-laden wastes he followed the blazed path of duty.

Darkness settled like a pall over the swamp. The sheriff halted prudently and ate sparingly of the light store of lunch which he carried in the knapsack. Then he struck a match, carefully housing the flame in the cup of his big palms, and measured out a dose of quinine and whiskey to ward off the malaria. The mosquitoes swarmed about him, and brushing them off impatiently he started on again indefatigably.

Minutes passed—hours. On and on he waded through the muck and mire, the succulent ooze closing consciously about his feet and seeping insistently through the eyelets of his hunting boots. His hands were bleeding slightly and his trousers were torn, but the terror of the swamp did not strike him, for he was filled with the exultation of the hunter.

He paused and the muscles of his hand hardened in visible ridges as the fingers closed automatically about the stock. Far off through the night he saw the blazing of a pine torch, and, knowing the nature of the man he was pursuing, he understood.

"I'll cresse 'im," he muttered, and advanced cautiously.

He shifted the shotgun to his left hand, and in his right he nursed the larger of the two revolvers—a huge six-chambered .44. His sharp eyes pierced the darkness of the immediate vicinity and he crept softly ahead, avoiding stumps and yawning holes of quick mud with marvelous cunning.

He drew close to the negro, and squatted down, muscles tensed, behind a decayed mass of slimy, giant roots; resting his revolver butt on a crotch, he aimed carefully.

His shotgun, placed carelessly against a stump, slipped, tottered and fell splashing into the water. The sheriff waited, breathless, but the negro had heard; his closely cropped head flew upward and the hand which held the torch dropped swiftly. The revolver spoke, cracking sharply in the awesome stillness of the night, and the torch dropped into the water, sizzled, spluttered and went out in a little cloud of pungent steam.

"Got 'im," grated the sheriff exultingly.

Then there came to his ears the regular splash, splash, of the man's running steps as he dashed away, unhurt, and occasionally he heard a stream of poorly muffled oaths as the hunted man stumbled and fell.

Vengeance and Duty allied, relentlessly pursued Life through the grimness of the night. Burning with blood-lust, thrilled with the primitive passion of the man-hunt, and writhing in impotent rage at the thought of his murdered son, his only child, the father entered the swamp, blind to all dangers and intent on one object.

The negro fled, terror-stricken, fear paramount, his every move prompted by the inborn love of life; except in a vague way the cause of it all was forgotten; the three men lived in the present, the subjects of their emotions, believing the end worthy of the means and of themselves.

The father entered the swamp at the far side after a rapid detour. The mental process was simple: it was natural to suppose that the negro would make for the haven held out to him by the other side. That the quarry would harbor the thought of voluntarily spending the night in the swamp the father knew to be extremely unlikely, for he was well aware of the deep-rooted terror of all negroes for the night with its unnamable, invisible and unknown dangers. He had heard of fugitive negroes living in the other swamps of the State for days and days, existing on berries; but no one lived in Hell Hole.

He advanced noiselessly. Around him thousands of frogs raised their raucous voices in grating unison to the canopy of drooping gray moss overhead, and the tiny insects of the night droned away in a curdling singsong of discord. Occasionally the hoot of an owl broke the oppressive sameness of sound.

Sharp and loud, there came to his ears the sound of a shot. He paused abruptly, and listened. The crack had been distinct and he knew that it had been caused by a heavy-calibred revolver. He gripped his gun more firmly and waited; evidently the shot had been fired at a distance greater than a quarter of a mile.

He heard the splashing of running feet; once the runner fell, and the father exultingly listened to the stream of vile profanity as he recognized the negro's voice.

Bringing the shotgun to his shoulder he calmly awaited the coming of his victim, the grim smile of the voluntary executioner distorting his iron features. The splashing drew nearer, the water in the little glade at his feet ruffled. Reverberating like thunder, the automatic spoke once, twice—seven times; echoing awesomely through the quietude of the forest marsh.

From the black throat there came a wild yell of terror; then, for a second, all was still.

As the sheriff's bullet struck the stump the negro dashed madly away through the swamp, straight toward the side from which he had entered.

The steps of his pursuer came relentlessly nearer, directly behind.

His countenance seamed with terror unutterable, he gasped painfully, clutching spasmodically at his heaving chest with both huge, horned hands. Once he dashed full into a jagged tree stump, and he cursed loudly as he recoiled from the impact, but staggered on, his face streaming with blood, his skin horribly torn by the undergrowth. The night exacted its toll, and his bloodshot eyes strove ineffectually to pierce the gloom.

Suddenly, before him, there came a flash and a deafening roar, while in the trees behind a rain of buckshot scattered. He felt a slight, stinging pain in his shoulder, and instinctively he dropped like a log and lay motionless. The gun spoke again and again, spitting forth its leaden messengers of death, then the shooting stopped, and he dashed back whence he had come, forgetting for the moment the existence of the man who had first fired.

Knowing that he had missed, cursing himself for not having shot to kill, yet half glad that he had not so far forgotten his duty, the sheriff pursued doggedly.

He ran more carefully than the fugitive, and although he did not make as much speed, he managed, with the agency of the night's stillness, to keep on the track of his quarry. Sound carries far in the swamps, and he knew that the negro could not escape. Once he heard the ominous rattle which foretells death, and he leaped nimbly to one side, jumping instinctively, in the nick of time, slipping and sliding in the ooze, his face bathed in cold perspiration.

Then came the roar of the shotgun; one of the stray buckshot ploughed through his shoulder, and he cursed softly as his own gun dropped, splashing, into the slime. In his left hand he clutched the revolver.

"Too late," he regretted; "the nigger's a goner!"

He heard the wild yell of terror and the subsequent crashing and splashing. He knew that the shells in the gun were exhausted, and he leaped to his feet, dashing toward the spot from whence the sound had come. The steps of another man sounded close by, running frantically in his direction; and he collided sickeningly, head-on, with a wild-eyed, black creature. Long, sinewy arms closed, vise-like, about his body, tentacle fashion, as they went down together.

And as they grappled the sheriff experienced a wild sense of primitive joy in knowing that he at last had in his hands that which he had sought.

Frenzied with the joy of the chase, the father pursued. He, too, ran wildly, and time and time again he was hurled from his feet by an invisible root, and many times he dashed full tilt into the spectral tree trunks.

He heard a wild yell, and then another; and then came the low, bubbling, gurgling cry of the trapped negro. There came to his ears an exultant shriek, demoniacal in its expression of ferocious, bestial triumph; and with it a low-voiced curse in the sheriff's tones. The eyes of the father gleamed.

"God!" he said, "the she'iff's got 'im!"

He reached them, locked in death embrace, in the water, struggling like madmen amidst slime and mud and water. Above their labored breathing both were cursing, with the deep-chested, fervent curses of fighting men.

Hypnotized, the father watched the battle for a few seconds; then from his pocket he slowly drew a long, shiny knife; in his eyes the gleam of the chase had been supplanted by an exultant glare. The moon had risen to the full, and its rays forced their way through the moss-covered tops, lighting the stage with an unnatural, silvery glare.

The father approached, knife in one hand, revolver in the other.

The negro found the sheriff's knife, and raised it to strike, and at the same instant the sheriff cried aloud and heaved upward with a last, Herculean effort. For a fleeting instant the negro paused, his hand upraised, gloating over the heaving man held powerless beneath his muscular body. In that moment the sheriff faced Death incarnate!

The one stolen second of triumph was fatal to the negro. There was a leap, a flash, a cry! The body of the victim stiffened; the unnatural expression which seamed his countenance gave way to one of unutterable surprise, and from his foam-flecked lips a dying stream of the vilest invective rolled.

There was another flash and yet another, dimly reflected in the pale light, and the negro's body contracted, relaxed, and then splashed lifelessly into the water.

The sheriff rose unsteadily to his feet. He faced the avenger, who had drawn his knife from the body and was calmly wiping it on his torn shirt. He gazed steadily at the sheriff.

"I tol' you I'd git 'im, she'iff," he said simply, "an' I done kep' my word!"

Mr. Bryan's Suggestion

WILLIAM Jennings Bryan has made a very interesting suggestion to President Wilson, and while Mr. Bryan, veteran campaigner that he is, probably thoroughly enjoyed making the suggestion, we are bound to treat it as a serious and sincere proposal on his part. But for Mr. Bryan, President Wilson would not have got the nomination at Baltimore in 1912. The latter promptly rewarded Mr. Bryan by making him Secretary of State. As a team they did not work well together and Mr. Bryan resigned.

Then when the Senate fight on the Peace Treaty and League of Nations Covenant was begun, Mr. Bryan took sides against the President. He declared that the President ought to accept the reservations and thus obtain ratification, seeing as he did, that ratification otherwise was impossible. He took this stand not because of opposition to the treaty as the President brought it back but because he considered ratification in some form or other to be the important thing. If Europe refused to accept the proposed reservations, the blame for what followed would rest more upon Europe than upon America.

The President at that time called for a "solemn referendum." Let the voters of America decide the matter, he said. And now, the said voters, having issued their mandate, Mr. Bryan solemnly suggests that President Wilson, who in the ordinary course of events would hold office until March 4 next, tender his resignation at once. He further suggests that Vice-President Marshall, who would succeed to the Presidency, should then appoint Senator Harding to be Secretary of State, and having done this should remove himself from office. The Secretary of State in that event would succeed to the powers and prerogatives of the Presidency, would become, in fact, President. And Senator Harding, being both President and President-elect, and having a Republican Congress to work with, would be in a position to accomplish something immediately.

President Wilson can do nothing with the present Congress. It doesn't like him personally and it is against him politically. Besides, which, it has the solid mandate of the country to back it up. This being so, and Senator Harding having frequently declared that he proposes to open negotiations with Europe for an association of nations, the question arises: Why should this vital matter be subjected to further and unnecessary delay? We have all seen and appreciated the dangers of delay, not only to Europe but to America.

Mr. Bryan's suggestion, therefore, whether or not he was laughing up his sleeve when he made it, is worthy of earnest consideration.

Benes And Little Entente

Alliance Of Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia And Rumania Explained By League Minister

BY T. R. YBARRA

Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, Sept. 2.—American ideals are at the root of the agreement just made between Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania, one of the most important steps taken since the armistice for the consolidation of Central Europe on a basis of peace and progress.

This statement was made to me today by Dr. Eduard Benes, Czecho-Slovakia's Minister of Foreign Affairs, who brought to a successful conclusion the negotiations leading up to the agreement between the three countries, which form what has been called the "little Entente," so important is their joint action regarded to be in Europe today.

On the previous day Dr. Benes had made to the Czecho-Slovak Legislature a speech explaining the tripartite agreement. He had said, among other things, that Czecho-Slovakia would conclude economic agreements with Russia as soon as possible.

I saw Dr. Benes at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the vast Hradcany, Prague's majestic citadel-palace, which crowns the heights on the left bank of the Vltava and commands a superb view of the beautiful Czecho-Slovak capital. I took care to observe the man closely, for I remembered the remark made by one high up in the councils of nations, who had been present at the sessions of the Peace Conference at Paris. It was to this effect:

"There are three men at the Peace Conference greater than the Big Four—greater than Wilson or Clemenceau or Lloyd George or Orlando. One is Premier Venizelos of Greece; the second is M. Dmowski, Polish delegate to the conference; the third is the delegate from Czecho-Slovakia, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Czecho-Slovak Republic, Dr. Eduard Benes."

The Foreign Minister of Czecho-Slovakia is wiry, alert, keen of eye, nervous, shrewd-looking, emphatic in gesture. He does not allow a slight difficulty with his English to interfere with the fluency and logical cohesion of his remarks. And he does not lose an instant in going squarely to the heart of his subject.

"The basis of the alliance between Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania is in accordance with the ideas advanced in conversations which I had with American representatives at the Peace Conference," said Dr. Benes. "The Czecho-Slovak delegation was very close to the American delegation at the conference. We constantly exchanged views on what the Europe-after-the-war should be. The Americans told me that they were against all that was narrow, all that was imperialistic or chauvinistic. They outlined a new Europe, based on the principles of a new democracy, and declared that this should be the ideal animating the new countries which had arisen as a result of the war. I assured them that their conceptions of the new world coincided with those of President Masaryk of Czecho-Slovakia and with my own.

"Thus we have endeavored to shape the policy of Czecho-Slovakia since the country became an independent republic. When the war ended the little countries of Europe were in a terrible state. They were nervous, afraid of their neighbors, afraid of the big powers. Being small and weak, they lived in terror lest some other country should suddenly take from them the liberty which had just come to them. Alarmist rumors terrified them. The situation was far worse than that of the big nations, who felt able to protect themselves.

"It was toward liberating the small nations from these fears, toward giving them a feeling of strength, of ability to protect themselves, that the national policy of Czecho-Slovakia has been directed since the peace conference. And the most important step toward the realisation of these ambitions has been the agreement just negotiated between Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania.

"One of the principal underlying causes for this alliance of these three southeastern European nations is their mutual protection against Hungary. None of the three harbor any thought of aggressive action against Hungary. Hungary, on the other hand, cherishes the thought of aggression against Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania.

"Hungary is the least changed of all the lands that were in the war. She is just what she was at the outbreak of the war; just as desirous to dominate and oppress other peoples. And it is with this clearly in mind that my country and the other two countries forming the 'little Entente' have taken this first step toward lessening the feeling of apprehension animating their peoples at the spectacle of Hungarian plans of aggression.

"In Hungary there are something like one hundred thousand men who were formerly employes of the Austo-Hungarian Government in Slovakia, Transylvania and Croatia, taken from Hungary by the Peace Treaty and assigned, respectively, to Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia. These men are out of work just now, as all they know how to do is to oppress subject nationalities and exploit them for the benefit of the Hungarians. Driven from Slovakia, Transylvania and Croatia by the people of those districts, who detest them, they are now gathered together in Hungarian territory with no other thought but to foment trouble in Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania, with the hope that some day Hungary may win back the lost lands and they themselves may be restored to their old posts under the Hungarian Government and be allowed once more to oppress and exploit the inhabitants of those regions, now free from the Hungarian yoke. It is this army of ex-functionaries of the Government who are at the bottom of Hungary's schemes of aggression against her neighbors.

"Under the guise of Bolsheviki hundreds of these Hungarians, sent by the Hungarian Government, entered Slovakia, formerly Hungarian territory but now a part of Czecho-Slovakia, and, while pretending to preach Bolshevism to the Slovaks, sought in reality to sow among them a desire to become again part of Hungary and to contribute in every way they could toward making trouble between the Slovaks and the Czecho-Slovak Government. This happened under the Friedrich Government of Hungary. We have proofs of it. And the present Government of Hungary is just as bad.

"But I think that, as a result of the alliance just concluded between Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania, Hungary will eventually see the folly of such a policy of aggression and trouble-making and realise that it is for her own interests to foster better relations with her neighbors. In the long run, I feel convinced, this change of policy by Hungary will lead to her joining the 'little Entente' and concluding political as well as economic agreements with these neighbors of hers. In the meantime, however, we three little democratic nations must take steps to protect ourselves."

"Do you apprehend trouble between Czecho-Slovakia and Germany?" I asked Dr. Benes.

"I do not," he replied instantly.

"But how about the German minority in Czecho-Slovakia? Will not Germany seek to back it for the purposes of overcoming Czech supremacy in the republic?"

"Germany will never do anything against the Czecho-Slovak Government for the sake of the German minority in Czecho-Slovakia," Dr. Benes said, "Germany realises that the Germans in Czecho-Slovakia tend to weaken the Czechs there. She will, therefore, protect them to a certain extent. But she also realises that those Germans are closely bound up with the rest of Czecho-Slovaki—with the Czech element, with Prague, the national capital, with other portions of the republic where Czechs outnumber Germans. In order to give control of Czecho-Slovakia to the German element there, Germany knows that she would have to get control of the whole country, and she is fully aware that the Entente powers would never let her do that. So she thinks it better to leave the Germans under the domination of the Czechs, to encourage their business and industrial development as good citizens of Czecho-Slovakia instead of fostering among them a feeling of 'irredentism.' Germany understands quite well that good economic and political relation with Czecho-Slovakia are to her advantage."

To my question regarding Czecho-Slovakia's relations with Poland and Austria, Dr. Benes said that all was going smoothly in those quarters. Since the settlement of the Teschen dispute with Poland, the two nations were getting along amicably, he said, while, as for Austria, there, too, harmony was gaining over the feeling of hatred which had prevailed before in the relations between the two lands.

And then we came to the question of Russia.

"In your speech yesterday you said that Czecho-Slovakia would seek to enter into economic relations with Russia as soon as possible," I said to Dr. Benes. "Did you mean that Czecho-Slovakia would make agreements while Russia was still under the rule of the Soviets?"

"Yes," replied Dr. Benes. "We cannot recognise the Bolsheviki Government," he told me. "But the resumption of economic relations with Russia will cause the collapse of the Bolshevist Government. As soon as the Russian people get in touch, by means of such relations, with the peoples of the rest of the world, I feel convinced that they will realise the impossibility of continuing under such a regime as Bolshevism and bring it to an end.

"And the Bolshevist Government is powerless to do anything

THE COCKTAIL

Life's flowing bowl if you'll figure it out,
Is a cocktail after all;
It's only a drink in the goblet of time
Which is sipped at the last roll call;
It's only a mixture of sorrows and joys,
It is flavored with passion and fears,
And like sparkling wine, it ripens with time
In the cask of the fleeting years.

LINES FROM LETTERS

Dear Bill,—We live in peculiar times, everything is topsy-turvy. Six months ago we were told that things would alter. They have. I read in the papers that some of the French damsels are now coloring their faces to match their dresses. Can you beat it? That's going to be a bit awkward if it spreads to men's fashions, for I am sure I should never be able to make my face match the Harris tweed suit one of our sporting gents was wearing at the races yesterday. It would require a couple of barbers to weave me a face to match the suit. And Bill, I hear that some of our young bloods in London are assuming side whiskers. Can't Mr. Smillie or Bottomley put a stop to it? Whiskers, like pet corns and poor relations, have a habit of growing on people. They ought to be taxed up to the chin.

Yours, BERT.

LOST BALL

An enthusiastic golfer—a scot—was wandering over the links, minus his clubs. A friend called out: "Aren't you playing today Sandy?" And the reply came "I'm not, I lost my ball yesterday."

THE QUEENSBERRY RULE

Reading Reuter's message today that Carpentier and Dempsey had decided to meet in 1921, and incidently to share $500,000 between them, calls to mind a story about the famous Queensberry family. The late Marquess of Queensberry was a descendant of the Douglas who, when stricken down with his wounds, thanked God that few of his race had died in their beds. For three centuries after his death the Queensberry Rule of dying in harness was observed with the rarest exceptions. With milder times the stern rule fell into abeyance, in favor of the better known Queensberry Rules of the Ring. The late Marquess looked death in the face more than once, and his heir, Viscount Drumlanrig had two narrow escapes during the war.

IS WOMAN OLD AT THIRTY?

While one expert says that a woman is at her best at thirty-five, others say she is old at thirty.

The latter statement is not borne out by the cases of the most fascinating women of history, many of whom staggered the world with their love affairs long after they had passed the thirtieth milestone.

Ninon de l'Enclos, the wonderful Queen of Hearts, was adored madly when she was sixty, and at ninety received a fervent declaration of love.

Cleopatra, who toyed with the love of monarchs, was thirty-eight when she poisoned herself, and there was never a suggestion that her allurements had begun to fade. The Empress Josephine, who captivated Napoleon, was so much older than her lover that when they were married their ages were given wrongly—there was such a wide breach of years between the boy Emperor and his middle-aged bride.

The indefinable thing we call charm is not a question of birthdays passed. There are some old women of twenty-five and gay grandmothers of sixty.

George Sand was considerably over thirty and extremely ugly when she was loved with such vehemence by Chopin; Helen of Troy had lovers by the score when forty, and, to come to a later date, Mme. Patti retained the wonderful freshness of her youth to the end.

LITTLE WILLIE

Willie had been told that he must always wait patiently till he was served at meals, and not cry across the table or grab for his food.

One day while dining out with his mother, the little fellow was accidentally overlooked. He was very patient for a time, but at last he could bear the strain no longer. So, leaning quietly aross to his mother, he said in a loud whisper: "Mother, do little boys who starve to death go to heaven?"

AND HAVE YOU HEARD

A Bishop encountered an old Irishman turning a windlass which handled up gravel from a well that was being dug. His hat was off, and the sun was pouring on his unprotected head.

"Don't you know that the sun will injure your brain if you expose it like that?" asked the Bishop.

The Irishman wiped the sweat off his forehead and looked at the clergyman.

"Do you think I'd be doing this all day if I had any brains?" he said.

Intelligent Preparedness

BY REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM S. SIMS, UNITED STATES NAVY

War is just around the corner. On the other side of the Atlantic a number of conflicts are raging. Polish troops are in a death grapple with the Bolsheviki. Turn to the west, and Japan is seen increasing her military power. For what? Is the country taking heed? Are we ready, if some one stricks a match that brings the conflagration to our doors? What sort of a fight could our armed forces put up tomorrow? Is there any truth in the statements that our personnel is not what it should be? And, above all, what part could the air service play in a conflict?

How much do you know about your country's defenses? Have you forgotten those days in 1917 when France kept calling for troops and more troops? Do you remember when our own raw recruits drilled with wooden guns?

All of that is over. The war has been won. But what about the future?

I believe that one of the paramount issues of the day is adequate national defense. To bring about a state of preparedness that will enable this country successfully to cope with any possible enemy is a duty the country owes to the valiant men who gave their lives in the great war.

We have always turned a deaf ear to repeated warnings to get ready. When we declared war many months slipped by before we could throw the weight of our strength into the struggle against Germany. No one can approximate the cost of that delay.

If the country is going to have any military and naval defense at all, it certainly should be adequate. The recent conflict taught us a great many lessons that we should take advantage of. Surely we must see in the present world unrest a warning to take heed for the future.

We should get ready and stay ready.

The molding of public sentiment to this end is a step in the right direction. Merchants and manufacturers, scientists, journalists and men experienced in the administering of large organisations can assist in co-ordinating the nation's great civilian industrial enterprises with our military and naval activities.

I dislike the idea of regarding military and naval men as a class apart. They should be brought into closer association with business men.

It is for this particular reason that I have accepted the Chairmanship of the Naval Committee of the Army and Navy Club of America in the movement to erect in New York City a $3,000,000 clubhouse in memory of the officers who died in the war. The thing that particularly impresses me with the club is that civilians are taking an interest in it, not only because it will be an adequate memorial to those who died, but because of their interest in their own people in the war and their certain interest in the degree of efficiency of the various branches of the service. We need the influence of business men in our military and naval affairs. Except in time of war, public attention in this country is seldom focused on preparedness. The reason we naval officers are much pleased by all these influences that are being brought to bear is because the club will give an opportunity for influential men in civilian life to come in contact with military men for an exchange of ideas.

Officers can point out to them the need of and the necessary means for preparedness. They can show them the cost of lack of preparedness and the consequent economy of keeping the nation's defenses ready for any eventuality. On the other hand, the people on the outside can be a great help to naval and military officers. They understand how our military activities can best be coordinated with the civilian industries needed in the war, it being assumed that wars in the future will be similar to those in the past, in that they will involve all the activities of the country—civilian and military. With this object in view, it is natural that we military men desire to be associated in a club with men who are leaders in civilian life. I particularly would like to see journalists and officers brought into closer association.

There is no means by which the public can be kept informed of the wisdom of adequate defense except by the printed page in both our daily press and regular periodicals. For this reason we members of the Army and Navy Club of America would like to see the leading newspaper men and magazine editors of this country take more interest in military affairs.

We do not yet have in this country a class of civilian writers who make a specialty of military journalism. This is in marked contrast to similar conditions in European countries, where military organisations, are under the constant fire of a most beneficial and stimulating criticism by thoroughly competent critics.

I would like it to be clearly understood that this is not criticism of lack of interest on the part of the American press. The difference has been in the past that we have lacked the pressure of the constant probability of war that they have had on the other side. As an illustration, we may suppose that Canada and the British possessions in North America were a hostile nation with a military power of a Germany. Under such conditions we may readily imagine that the people would sit up and take notice if the efficiency of our military defenses were seriously criticised.

We may also readily imagine that with an intensive public interest in this subject it would not be long before every important paper had a man on the staff competent to criticise the Government with respect to our national defense.

Assuming, as we do with confidence, that the press is now taking a more active interest in military preparedness, it may be pointed out that a club such as the one now projected would furnish a reservoir of interest to military correspondents of the various papers. Moreover, such a club would bring them in personal contact with officers accurately informed in many different specialties—and, it may be said, without such contact no military critic can keep up to date and be very beneficial to the cause he is writing about or very successful in his own line of endeavor.

The club differs from most memorials, whether purely monumental or buildings used for various purposes, in that it will contain the records of all the officers who lost their lives in the war. These records will be available, not only to the military members of the club, but also to the relatives of these men. It will be in a sense a national library of military and naval heroism.

There is another point in connection with the club, and that is the stimulating criticism that military men will get from the civilian club members, whose viewpoint is necessarily markedly different. If the military organisations of the country are not open at all times to perfectly free constructive criticism it is very possible for dangerous conditions to arise. Few situations could be more dangerous than that the public should be led to believe that their national defenses were adequate and the personnel of the various branches well trained when in fact they were not.

It is this sort of condition which has been chiefly responsible for the disastrous defeats recorded in history.

It is perfectly natural for those responsible for the efficiency of an organisation to defend itself against criticism. In this respect armies and navies do not differ from any other organisation. If they can so arrange matters that criticism is prevented and they themselves become the sole source of information to the public as to their efficiency, they are then assured of a perfectly happy and comfortable existence. But it is just this condition that is the most dangerous, and it is the duty of the people to see that the organisation is such and the requirements are such that unbiased criticism is available at all times to the press of the country.

In this connection it should also be clearly understood that under proper regulations those who are best informed on military matters—that is, the officers of the military services—should be allowed at all times to express their views in such a way that they will be accessible to the public. This practice in European countries insures that their military services benefit by continuous helpful criticism and suggestion.

The aim of the club is to enroll the 195,000 officers who served in the war, as well as ex-officers in retirement and officers of the National Guard, and also the patriotic business men and civilians who helped to win by their efforts back home. The country will have in the proposed club a center for the dissemination of the highest ideals of Americanism. The best traditions of the service will be preserved there with the records of the dead. It will be a place where future generations may find inspiration from the deeds of those who have gone before. And that is exactly what is needed. We must make patriotism a workable, practical thing, not a mere sentiment. We must show more than a lackadaisical interest in the country's welfare, and especially in the development of the army and navy along progressive lines. It is not enough to talk about it; we must work, and the only effective way to go to work is to get together.

It is the most durable of all decorations, lasting for years with freshness unimpaired, whereas wall-papers deteriorate from the first day by fading and accumulating dust and dirt.

School For Card Players

AUCTION BRIDGE

Question—Please explain the duties of the leader's partner with regard to finessing. Every one in our circle finesses on partner's lead, both with trumps and without. What is the rule?—G. B. G.

Answer—The adversaries of the declarer never have any opportunity to finesse, except against themselves. The one with dummy on her left knows to a certainty whether or not she can win the trick. The one with dummy on her right has no finesse under any circumstances. For example: If her partner leads a small card and the holds ace-queen, to finesse the queen is to throw it away if the declarer has the king. If the leader has the king, it does not matter which card, ace or queen, is played to the trick.

Question—The bidding starts with one heart, by Z, dealer. A two diamonds, Y two hearts, B three diamonds, Z three hearts; A doubles. Z now shifts to three spades, to which A objects, insisting that Z cannot change her own bid, that being the privilege of the partner only.—Mrs. G. M. W.

Answer—The double reopens the bidding, just as much as going to four diamonds would have done and Z has a perfect right to change. If A could have defeated the heart contract, but not the spades, she should have passed, it being a good rule not to double one suit unless prepared to double anything else.

Question—The dealer bids one no trump, and the only four-card suit held by the leader was hearts—queen, ten, nine and trey. We have a little bet as to the correct card to lead from such a combination.—H. B. W.

Answer—While these suits, headed by honors not in sequence, are admittedly bad ones to open, one must lead something, and if such a suit is selected, there being no high-card combination from which to lead, the proper opening is the fourth-best; in this case the trey of hearts.

POKER

Question—We have a small bet as to the origin of this game. A being of the opinion that it was invented by a Mr. Schenck, who was at one time minister to some European country.—C. L.

Answer—Schenck simply formulated the first set of rules for the game that were used in England, writing them out for his hostess when he was at a house party in Shropshire. Poker was played in America at least a hundred years ago, and was well known on the Mississippi fifty years before Schenck's rules. On account of their brevity and clearness, Schenck's rules had quite a reputation for a time.

Question—A does not like the methods of the player next to whom he is seated, and in order to get away from him leaves the game for a space. On returning, he is told that the only seat he can have is the one he left, no one else being willing to take it. What is the rule about seats at poker, or is there none?—C. M. McK.

Answer—The usual club rule, in the laws, is that players draw or throw round cards for seats at the start, and that at the end of every hour's play, if any player demand it, the cards must be thrown round again, the players taking their seats in the order of the rank of the cards drawn.

against this. It must get into touch with the rest of the world. Unless it does so it cannot exist. And even if it fears that doing so will bring about its collapse it must still enter into relations.

"Of course, what it hopes is that, by means of these economic agreements, it can continue to poison the world with its propaganda. That is the Bolshevist view. Mine is different. The Russian Bolsheviki think economic relations with other countries will bring Bolshevism to those countries. I think they will bring about the collapse of Bolshevism in Russia. So I am not afraid of entering into agreements with the Russian Bolsheviki."

I had heard much in Prague about the danger of Bolshevism in Czecho-Slovakia, so my next question dealt with that.

"There has never been any danger of Czecho-Slovakia becoming Bolshevised and there never will be," was the instanteous reply of the Foreign Minister. "The workingmen of the country, among whom there are many radicals, are extremely well organised, but the peasants of Cezcho-Slovakia are also well organised. Now, Czecho-Slovakia is essentially a half-agrarian country, and we have no agrarian troubles to contend with. There is no Bolshevism among our peasants. All our Bolsheviki are concentrated in the towns and cities."

The Zodiacal Signs In Legend And In Science; Why Sun Appears To Pass Through The Various Constellations Each Year

BY GARRETT P. SERVISS

"According to some authorities the ancients worshipped the constellations of the zodiac thus: When the vernal equinox took place in the first degree of Taurus they were 'bull worshippers'; in Pisces 'fish worshippers'; in Aries 'lamb, or ram, worshippers'; and so on. As the sun recedes about one degree in seventy-two years, or a whole sign (30 degrees) in 2160 years, a total alternation has taken place, in so much that those stars which formerly were in Aries were later in Taurus, still later in Gemini, and so on. Hence, the sun has passed through all the signs since the world began. My understanding was that the sun passes through each sign every year. Will you please explain? L. T."

The sun does pass through each and all the signs of the Zodiac once every year. This apparent revolution of the sun projected against the background of the starry heavens is due to the annual actual revolution of the earth around the sun.

If you had pictures of the twelve constellations of the zodiac painted on the inside of the circular fence surrounding a race track, and if you rode round the track, keeping your eyes fixed upon a golden ball set up in the center of the field to represent the sun, then you would see this imitation sun passing across the signs opposite to you, and making a complete circuit of your painted zodiac every time that you yourself made a circuit of the track.

Moreover the direction of the sun's apparent motion around the circle would be the same as that of your real motion. This explains the annual progress of the sun around the circle of the signs, taking a month to pass through each sign in succession.

RECESSION OF THE SUN

Now, for the recession of the sun, carrying it backward through the same signs once in about 2160 years. To imitate this phenomenon, suppose the circular fence to be double, the outer part being fixed in position and painted black, with the constellations that are included in the zodiacal belt represented upon it by brilliant stars, while the inner part is moveable and made of glass on which the figures of the zodiacal signs (a ram, a bull, a lion, etc.) are painted in outline so as not to interfere with the visibility of the stars on the motionless part of the fence behind them.

The glass circle, with its painted signs must be supposed to have a revolution in the direction contrary to that in which you ride around the track and its velocity must be relatively so slow that it makes only one complete backward turn while you are going 2160 times around the track. Since all circles have the same number of degrees, this would cause the signs to recede on the background of the constellations at the rate of about one degree in 72 turns.

It is the signs that move and not the constellations and the movement of the signs is referred to their starting point, the vernal equinox, or first point of Aries, which is where the sun crosses the equator, coming northward, about March 21. Owing to a slow conical motion of the earth's axis, resembling the swinging round of the peg of a spinning top, and caused by the attraction of the sun and the moon upon the equatorial protuberance of the earth, the two opposite crossing points of the ecliptic (or apparent path of the sun), and the equator are shifted continually westward, and since, as we have just seen, the vernal equinox is located at one of those points, while the circle of the zodiacal signs is immoveably attached to the equinox, it follows that the whole framework of the signs must shift westward over the stars.

PRECESSION OF EQUINOXES

This motion is called the precession of the equinoxes. It amounts to about 50 seconds of arc per year, or one degree, as already stated, in 72 years. A complete circuit requires about 26,000 years.

As to the former worship of the constellations successively covered by the first sign of the zodiac, all is conjectural. As far as is known, Hipparchus was the first to discover the motion of the vernal equinox, and he is credited with having been the first to divide the zodiac into twelve signs. At any rate in his time, second century B. C., the signs and the constellations bearing the same names were in accord, beginning with Aries, which then contained the vernal equinoctial point. Accordingly, in deference to your authorities, Hipparchus ought to be regarded as a "ram worshipper," but history makes this improbable by showing him to have been one of the most advanced thinkers of ancient times, not a metaphysician, but an observer of, and reasoner about, verifiable facts. He made the first known star catalogue, observed the first recorded new star, founded the science of trigonometry, invented the circles of latitude and longitude which made geography a science, and, as already remarked, discovered the precession of the equinoxes.

CHILDISH STAGE PASSED

One may feel sure that there was no superstition back of such a man's doings with the zodiac and its signs. Very likely he may have thought it advisable to let people who could not comprehend the scientific reasons for what he did, entertain themselves with legends about men and animals in the sky, as we awaken the intelligence of children by first interesting them in the stories of Jack and the Beanstalk and Cinderella's slippers.

Astronomers find very little occasion for reference to the signs of the zodiac now. The world is fast passing out of the childish stage "The Ram, the Bull, the Heavenly Twins" now dwell in "The House that Jack Built."

HELD IN URUGUAY IN TRUNK MURDER

Fox, Arrested On Ship, Denies He Is Le Roy, Wanted As Wife Slayer

NEVER IN DETROIT, HE SAYS

His Arrest Is Based On Likeness To Man Said To Have Shipped Body

Montevideo, September 15.—Morris Fox, who was recently arrested aboard the British freighter Dryden because of his resemblance to Eugene Le Roy, alleged to be the perpetrator of the Detroit and New York "trunk murder," was detained for identification today by the Uruguayan police when the Dryden arrived from Rio Janeiro. The action was at the request of the United States authorities.

Fox was arrested on August 25 last when the Dryden arrived at Rio Janeiro, but in the absence of an extradition treaty between the United States and Brazil he was detained on board the vessel until it proceeded to this port.

The police here, who possess only an inadequate description of Le Roy furnished by the American Legation, were said to be skeptical that Fox was the man wanted, basing their conclusions on preliminary questioning and an examination of documents produced by Fox to show that he was not Le Roy. A slight scar on his right leg, however, and several other characteristics were said to correspond with the furnished descriptions.

Fox declared that he could produce a score of witness to prove that he was in New York when the murder was committed and that he never was in Detroit.

"Why don't they let me go back to the United States immediately?" he asked. "I can show in a minute where I have been."

NATURALISED RUSSIAN

Fox produced a certificate from Toronto naturalisation authorities, showing that he is the son of Max Fox, a naturalised Russian Jew, and that he was born in Russia in September, 1900. Reciting his movements since April, 1919, he said he was in Norfolk at that time and had joined the Seamen's Union, shipping aboard the steamer Lake Orange for Cuba in May. He returned in June to New York, where he started work with his father as a garment maker. On September 9, 1919, he and his father went to Toronto, where he remained until January 17, 1920, when he returned to New York and worked at the garment trade until he shipped aboard the Dryden. He went to sea, he said, because it was an off season in garment making and he was pressed for money.

The Uruguayan police today questioned the Spanish-speaking members of Dryden's crew. These said that Fox neither spoke nor understood Spanish, a knowledge that Le Roy is said to have possessed. Later when Fox was questioned by the police he appeared to have no comprehension of Spanish.

Fox declared he had several opportunities to escape from the Dryden, especially at Santos, the principal port of call between here and Rio Janeiro, and that if he were Le Roy he naturally would have taken advantage of these opportunities.

IGNORANCE OF DUTIES

New York, September 16.—Fox, who claims residence in Toronto, shipped aboard the Dryden from this port last August as an ordinary seaman. He explained an ignorance of seamanship by saying that he was heavily pressed by debts and wished to leave this city, where he had been employed as a garment worker.

Harry Maflett, British seaman whose place aboard the Dryden was taken by Fox, furnished the New York police with information regarding Fox following newspaper accounts of the finding of the severed body of Katherine Lou Jackson in a trunk which had been shipped here from Detroit.

Maflett told the local authorities he was impressed by the resemblance between a newspaper photograph of Le Roy, charged with the murder, and Fox.

Orders for the man's detention were sent by wireless to the Dryden, and when the vessel arrived in Rio Janeiro Fox was detained for identification in a steel cell on the ship.
